

Cricket Texaco Trophy: England v South Africa

England leave it late to strike form

Mike Selvey at Headingley

THE difference a day makes. Beaten at The Oval by three wickets last Thursday, and again at Old Trafford on the Saturday — by 32 runs — England cast off their inhibitions in the Headingley sunshine a day later and slaughtered the most efficient one-day outfit in the business, winning the final match under Texaco's sponsorship by seven wickets with 16 overs in hand. This is definitely not a wind-up.

It brought to an end a string of six consecutive defeats for Captain Adam Hoggie — who instead of being picked in the match will now probably be put up for a knighthood — and an even surlier run of eight defeats by South Africa since Mike Atherton's side beat them by five wickets under lights in Bloemfontein more than two years ago.

The key was superb bowling — by Darren Gough, England's Man of the Series, and Angus Fraser, that held the tourists to 34 for two after 15 overs, and later by Mark Barmby and Robert Croft — after South Africa had opted to bat first on a slyly pitched track that darted and died wickedly in the night.

They managed only 205 for eight, a slender score that might have been a good deal lower had Shaun Pollock, on four, not survived what appeared to be a catch at the wicket in Croft's first over. Pollock went on to make 60 from 54 balls, adding 40 not the sixth wicket fall, while Hoggie (35), and 52 for the eighth with Mark Barmby (28) not out. If England were slender favourites in the half-way stage, having Allan Donald and Pollock to exploit the pitch gave South Africa more than a sliver of hope.

Knightfall... Donald celebrates the diamond of England's opener, but not before he had scored a match-winning 51 runs. PHOTO: MARK BARMBY

That was obliterated inside 17 overs by Alastair Brown and Nick Knight. With rhythm upon by the Kallis's supreme piece of fielding from cover point, Brown's contribution was 53, scored from 40 balls with 11 fours, a display of free hitting that brought a standing ovation from the crowd and the Man of the Match award from Ian Botham.

Brown passed his half-century in 31 balls, which if it appears sluggish by comparison with South African's world record of 17 balls for England second only to Chris Old's 30-ball effort against India in the 1975 World Cup at Lords, and three balls faster than Glennie Hick's record for this competition, against Pakistan in 1992.

Knight, too, played another fine innings, reaching 51 from 79 balls with six boundaries before he was caught by Jonny Rhodes — South Africa's Man of the Series — at backward point as he pushed forward to Donald.

By now England could have afforded to throttle back. Instead Matthew Fleming, in at number three, maintained the momentum with 18 from 17 balls, including a six over square leg from Lance Klusener, before Alec Stewart (28) not out and Nasser Hossain (35) not out made the remaining 18 runs.

There will be no temptation, as there is when England win Test matches at The Oval, to indulge in the usual post-match celebrations. To suggest that this win comes on the back of a dead aeris when the opposition do not carry the same burden of purpose is to be insulting to the South African team. It was in their first-class cricket since they last met in 1991, when they were in Bridgetown at the end of March, played a compelling Test match at The Oval, triumphantly. The series was never looked back, trading fastest lap with his team-mate until Coulthard's engine blew up mid-way round the 18th lap.

"At the start I tried to see if I could squeeze around the outside of Mika on the first corner," said Coulthard, "but I ran out of space and decided to drop back and assess the situation."

"I felt good and started to close on Mika again but my engine blew and that was it, no more."

As if that was not enough, Hoggie got a double bonus when Schumacher produced a performance which ended on lap 30 with a vigorous bargaining match with Alexander Villeneuve. Hoggie had battled for the first 15 laps.

The issue of whether Hoggie retains the captaincy for the triangular series later in the summer, and beyond, remains up in the air. There are those who would wish to only the position of Test and one-day captain simply because to do otherwise goes against the grain. But the chairman of selectors, David Graveney, had the vision to realise that the one-day captaincy might require different qualities from the Test job, and little has happened to deflect him from that view.

South Africa 205 for 8; England 206 for 5. England won by seven wickets.

Motor Racing

Hakkinen is streets ahead

Alan Henry in Monte Carlo

MIKA HAKKINEN's perfect drive to victory through the streets of Monaco was not just another glittering entry in the McLaren-Mercedes record book but could also have been the moment when the auburn-spun Finn made his break for the 1998 World Championship.

With key rivals Damon Hill, Michael Schumacher, both falling to increase their points tally in the Monaco Grand Prix, Hakkinen ended the day 17 points ahead of the Scot.

"I have competed here on seven occasions and have never before finished the race," he said. "To win in Monaco is every driver's dream."

In the final stages Hakkinen had sufficient advantage to see his pace and conserve it. Earlier he had tapped a barrier at the tight Rascasse hairpin, fired the pits, and was consequently the McLaren had suffered suspension damage.

In fact, he had no reason to worry and took the chequered flag on the 11th lap ahead of the impressive Giancarlo Fisichella, who drove his Benetton with great aplomb, despite a burst tyre and a broken left-hand drive. For the first time since he was 11, Hakkinen was not more than half a minute.

Starting from pole position, Hakkinen just squeezed out Coulthard on the crucial 300-metre sprint to the 11th lap, but he was not as close as he seemed. Coulthard's engine blew up mid-way round the 18th lap.

"At the start I tried to see if I could squeeze around the outside of Mika on the first corner," said Coulthard, "but I ran out of space and decided to drop back and assess the situation."

"I felt good and started to close on Mika again but my engine blew and that was it, no more."

As if that was not enough, Hoggie got a double bonus when Schumacher produced a performance which ended on lap 30 with a vigorous bargaining match with Alexander Villeneuve. Hoggie had battled for the first 15 laps.

The issue of whether Hoggie retains the captaincy for the triangular series later in the summer, and beyond, remains up in the air. There are those who would wish to only the position of Test and one-day captain simply because to do otherwise goes against the grain. But the chairman of selectors, David Graveney, had the vision to realise that the one-day captaincy might require different qualities from the Test job, and little has happened to deflect him from that view.

South Africa 205 for 8; England 206 for 5. England won by seven wickets.

10/158, No 23
Week ending June 7, 1998

Habibie urged to free East Timor leader

Nick Cunningham-Bruce and John Aglionby in Jakarta

THE Indonesian president, Abdurrahman Wahid, urged growing calls for action over East Timor last week, on top of renewed domestic agitation for reform and international pressure to restore economic stability.

The British foreign minister, David Blunkhorn, met the jailed East Timorese leader, Xanana Gusmão, in Jakarta, and urged Mr Habibie to free the country's most famous detainee as a step towards resolving tensions over the former Portuguese colony that Indonesia has ruled for 23 years.

Barely a week after taking over, Mr Habibie sought to offset demands for accelerating change by agreeing to a new session of parliament to revise election laws. A general election would follow early next year.

It was a gesture intended to distance Mr Habibie's government from the discredited Suharto regime, and came after he paid the first visit by a president to parliament in more than three decades. Two more political detainees were also freed.

Mr Habibie was also hoping to persuade Robert Melick, the leading Indonesian Monetary Fund director, to release the $41 billion of cash under his supervision. The cash, which was suspended on Mr Suharto's government collapsed.

Julien Rais, the most visible and outspoken opposition leader, condemned the election plan. The existing parliament was "a creation of the ancient past," he said, and it would be "more reasonable, and it would be" to wait for a couple of months and have a real, genuine general election.

Mr Habibie received more encouraging reaction from Mr Blunkhorn, who urged him to "use the momentum of both political and economic reform."

Mr Blunkhorn, who was visiting the embassy of Tony Blair, representing the European Union, welcomed the release of political prisoners.

He also called for the United States, Australia and Portugal for the release of Mr Gusmão. It would facilitate a "just, global and internationally acceptable solution to the problem," he said.

The government has promised to review the cases of all political detainees, but Mr Habibie's advisers say there is resistance from the army forces to setting Mr Gusmão free.

Family fortunes, page 4

The Guardian Weekly

Jubilant Pakistanis set off fireworks in a Lahore street to celebrate the series of nuclear tests conducted by their country last week in response to India's challenge. PHOTOGRAPH: MOHAMED RAFA

Our Bomb is sacred, theirs a disgrace. That's hypocrisy

COMMENT
Hugo Young

TONY BLAIR'S New Labour was built on nuclear weapons. There were other foundations as well, but the Bomb was proof of virtue, and it had deep consequences. Excluding the Campaign for Nuclear Disarmament from the sum of the party required the abandonment of all discussion of Britain's nuclear policy. Hardly any Labour politician has done so for the past five years.

The tests by India and Pakistan, however, don't permit the silence to continue. For Britain was an accessory before the fact of them. Their happening engages Britain as a nuclear power, and the ruling class in Washington wanted us to have a more particular reason too.

The argument India used for its five tests was, essentially, the same Britain has used since she went nuclear 50 years ago. The critical propellant in both cases was the need for status and apparent independence. "We will not accept an unequal system," said the ruling class in Britain's test to the UN Security Council. "The Bomb is a status symbol, and the only way we will do what we want to do, we will do it with the Bomb."

India's gambit, carried dangers. It was not new technology, we've known for 25 years that India could make a bomb, and so, with China's bootlegged help, could Pakistan. But the shameless, teeming heights of the Bomb, and the power, the Bomb is the most sacred relic of Britain's past. We got it because we knew how to make it, and Washington wanted us to have a more particular reason too.

This continues in the New Labour world. A war theology has grown up around the British Bomb, which will not be revised. In defence terms, however, it is fiction. The Bomb is a status symbol, and the only way we will do what we want to do, we will do it with the Bomb."

The pledge would require Washington and Moscow to rise above the shambles of their politicians, and the demands of their military industries. A strange lack of interest infects the Western attitude to the nuclear subcontinent. This is happening a long way away. In fact, it's the wake-up call which says the status quo is hideously unsustainable.

Other comment appears on pages 6, 12, 14 and 16

India seeks nuclear convention

Guardian Reporters

AFTER Pakistan staged a series of nuclear tests last week, India insisted it would carry out no more for the time being, but indicated that it was not prepared to sign a test ban treaty without a global commitment to disarmament.

Sending to defect criticism of its tests last month, New Delhi called for the establishment of a Nuclear Weapons Convention, along the lines of existing agreements that outlaw chemical and biological arms, to "globalise" nuclear disarmament.

But the proposal was dismissed as unrealistic and imprudent in the face of insistence by the United States, Russia, China, Britain and France that under the Non-Proliferation Treaty (NPT) no one but them may possess nuclear weapons.

Critics in the French president, Jacques Chirac, called on the international community to "limit its efforts" to convince both India and Pakistan to sign the Comprehensive Test Ban Treaty (CTBT).

The British Foreign Secretary, Robin Cook, said: "If India wants to get back to centre stage in the international community then it has got to send signals that it accepts the rules. The first starting point for that should be to sign up to the CTBT, without conditions."

Foreign ministers of the Big Five nuclear states are to meet later this week to push for more active disarmament measures. India's defence minister, George Fernandes, said in an interview broadcast on Monday that India did not need to carry out more tests. But he added: "In terms of a country's security concerns, one doesn't say the last word at any point in time."

Thousands die in Afghan quake

Vote deals blow to Milosevic

Fish 'n' chips comes off menu

Internet poses a tax teaser

Gazza gets boot from World Cup

Albania	100	Albania	200
Andorra	100	Andorra	200
Austria	100	Austria	200
Belgium	100	Belgium	200
Denmark	100	Denmark	200
France	100	France	200
Germany	100	Germany	200
Italy	100	Italy	200
Netherlands	100	Netherlands	200
Norway	100	Norway	200
Portugal	100	Portugal	200
Spain	100	Spain	200
Sweden	100	Sweden	200
Switzerland	100	Switzerland	200

Cryptic crossword by Araucaria

- Across
- Receiving a gap, 252 clowns went on the stage (9)
 - See 26
 - Rain or part (5)
 - Caring is elicited (9)
 - Excursion to 30-clown over with little water by Spooner (3,4)
 - Nothing by ear from the river (7)
 - How French is French? Twice English, say what you like (7,2,4)
 - Departed icon gets spirit-doctoring — something nasty in the state (6,5)

- Down
- A lot of letters, some of them companion (7)
 - Cid the letters with pleasure (7)
 - London borough with revolutionary connection (9)
 - Critics of the biblical kingdom (5)
 - Early ship divides doctor and Dutch uncle in development area (8)
 - Horse team in, come, possibly (9)

1 Standing room at the back for

- a fool to beauty (4,4)
- Voluble little female anga? (5)
 - Put press and broadcasting underground — Conservative making the connection (14)
 - Where's the plot? Prepare to shoot mine (7)
 - Mixed gins and pub after "Time, gentlemen, please?" (7)
 - Fiddling next? (7,8,6)
 - Flower — a different one? A different one (9)
 - Classical (I say to myself) doctor (9)
 - See 5
 - Plan the ground for Dorset village (9)
 - 20 Daff cars, daff cars — but 14 (Scott) (5,3,8)
 - Gorge on chesses (7)
 - Some correspondents send an age — the other way it causes grief (8)
 - See 16
 - Pick up note on hill (6)

Last week's solution

Bearing in mind the fates worse than debt

The Guardian Weekly

THE G8 summit's failure to provide debt relief for the world's poorest countries proves once again that the rich can have their cake and eat it. G8 debt relief package falls

China. We have seen the recent "deepening" of Sino-US relations with Jiang Zemin's red-carpet trip to Washington, and are shortly to see the Clinton Shuffle across Tiananmen Square. Engagement, not containment.

THERE are other issues that go beyond the computer industry: (Microsoft sued for abuse of monopoly, May 24). It is highly likely that browsing the Internet could turn

NOAM Chomsky's article (Mar 24) provided a good balance to

"The destruction was quite amazing," said the UN co-ordinator for Afghanistan, Alfredo Witsch-Cestari, after returning from Share-Buzurg, the worst affected area.

The destruction was quite amazing," said the UN coordinator for Afghanistan, Alfredo Wisnecarski, returning from Shancabaz, the world's largest

A TORNADO that struck without warning wiped out the small town of Spencer in South

抄本

Subscribe to Britain's best international news weekly

☐ Tick box if you do not wish to receive offers from carefully selected companies

While Sean Parnell, a general, must disagree that female leadership would result in global conflict being settled by negotiation and compromise (Men in trouble, May 24).

Peter Llewellyn,
Dar es Salaam, Tanzania

Letters to the Editor and other correspondence to: The Guardian Weekly, 75 Farringdon Road, London EC1M 3JQ.
Fax: 44-171-242-0885 (UK 0171-242-0885)
e-mail: weekly@guardian.co.uk
Subscription, change of address and general inquiries to: gwaubs@guardian.co.uk

Liberal and Conservative parties in return for her endorsement. Horacio Serpa of the ruling Liberal party, which won 34.6 per cent of the vote, will face the police were on the streets on polling day, but at least 11 people were killed. Leftwing guerrillas forced the cancellation of voting in 27 towns and kidnapped more than 20 election officials.

Homosexual acts are illegal in Zimbabwe. President "Robert Mugabe has mounted a personal campaign against gays and lesbians, describing them as "lower than er began than a dispersed they have peacefully Indonesia's

100

WHILE Sean French's argument is clearly very persuasive, I must disagree that female leadership would result in global conflict being settled by negotiation and compromise (Men in trouble, May 24).

Peter Llewellyn,
Dar es Salaam, Tanzania

Annual subscription rates: £120 (UK), £130 (Europe), £140 (USA and Canada), £180 Rest of World.
Letters to the Editor and other editorial correspondence to: The Guardian Weekly, 75 Farringdon Road, London EC1M 3JQ.
Fax: 44-171-242-0985 (UK) 0171-242-0985
e-mail: weekly@guardian.co.uk
Subscription, changes of address and general inquiries to: gwsubs@guardian.co.uk political favours and possibly even an eventual government post from the long-dominant Liberal and Conservative parties in return for her endorsement. Horacio Serpa of the ruling Liberal party, which won 34.6 per cent of the vote, will face the Almost 250,000 soldiers and police were on the streets on polling day, but at least 11 people were killed. Leftwing guerrillas forced the cancellation of voting in 27 towns and kidnapped more than 20 election officials.

bodyguard who was given 10 years for the 1995 murder of a fellow policeman who 'had' called him a 'Bakwena' wife.

Homosexual acts are illegal in Zimbabwe. President Robert Mugabe has motivated a personal campaign against gays and lesbians, describing them as 'lower than rule embraced atop winding central Harare on Monday.

dent, who resumed a protest last week, wrecked more than a dozen shop windows but before the police arrived. The force Mr Mugabe said to quit or face the same fate as its ousted President Siyiso.

Correction: In 1994 Senator Dianna Feinstein (not Barbara Boxer, as stated by Martin Kettie two weeks ago) defeated Michael Huffington in the 1994 California election for the US Senate. Barbara Boxer (D) defeated Bruce Hirschenson (R) to win a Senate seat in 1992.

100

Montenegro poll loss puts Milosevic at risk

Jonathan Steele in Podgorica

SLOBODAN Milosevic has suffered a blow from voters in Montenegro who could destroy what remains of the Yugoslav Federation and prevent his reelection as its president.

Voters gave the reformist parties an outright majority in last Sunday's parliamentary elections that will allow them to block constitutional changes and undercut Mr Milosevic's power.

Fears that he might refuse to accept the result and use the army to impose a state of emergency waned when his ally, Momir Bulatovic, the head of the leading Socialist National party (SNP), acknowledged defeat.

At the end of counting, the electoral commission said the coalition led by President Milo Djukanovic had a 49.5 per cent share of the vote. The SNP won 36 per cent and the Liberal Alliance 6 per cent, with the balance shared among a clutch of smaller parties.

"These polls will not be considered either free or fair, because of the media blockade and police harassment, but the counting was in order and the party will accept the will of the people," Mr Bulatovic said.

Mr Djukanovic had urged his supporters not to riot, and only a few fired shots into the air in the early hours. A handful of cars drove around town with banners supporting his slogan "For a Better Life".

But off the streets the celebration was intense, and in the police headquarters bottles of rakli were being passed around as officers sang Montenegrin victory songs. Support from the police is a strong element in Mr Djukanovic's confidence in resisting pressure from Belgrade.

The Milosevic factor was a main campaign issue. Walls were covered with posters showing his eyes and nose in close-up and the word "Enough".

Mr Djukanovic, who has won strong support internationally, says he wants to democratise Yugoslavia and make common cause with the pro-European parties in the Serbian opposition. He has threatened to take Montenegro out of Yugoslavia if reforms go on being blocked.

This would end the federation, since the other four republics left six years ago when Mr Milosevic started on his failed crusade for a "Greater Serbia".

Mr Djukanovic has been ambiguous on whether Montenegro will secede. He says he is against it, as long as there is a chance of the federation becoming a modern democracy with a market economy.

"Do you want to live under the yoke of Milosevic and his wife as outcasts from the world or as a free and proud people in a reformed, democratic state," he asked at a election rally.

Montenegro, which has only 650,000 people compared with Serbia's 10 million, is dependent on Serbia for electricity and raw materials. But it has a stunning coastline and could benefit from tourism.

The result creates a new crisis for

Mr Milosevic. He had been hoping to change the constitution to take control of Montenegro's police and give himself the right to a second term as president.

This now looks impossible. Under Yugoslavia's post-communist constitution, Montenegro has 20 seats, the same as Serbia, in the upper house of the federal assembly.

Mr Milosevic controls some 15 of the Serbian seats. He needed at least 12 from Montenegro for the two-thirds majority that is required to change the constitution. But last Sunday's results barely give him the six extra he needs to pass legislation, which can be done by simple majority.

Mr Djukanovic's first move at the federal level may be to try to unseat Mr Bulatovic, the recently appointed federal prime minister. He may also question Mr Milosevic's policy on Kosovo. Mr Djukanovic supports the idea of international mediation, rejected so far by Belgrade.

Washington Post, page 16

Iraq claims damages from Britain

Ian Black, and agencies in Amman

IRAQ has opened a new front in its propaganda war with the West by demanding compensation from Britain for damage it claims was caused by depleted uranium shells fired during the Gulf war.

Baghdad, working hard to raise awareness of the impact of United Nations sanctions, says cases of foetal and bone diseases, hair loss, skin diseases and child leukaemia have increased in areas where the shells were used in 1991.

The state-controlled Iraqi News Agency reported last week that a complaint had been sent to the UN secretary general, Kofi Annan, by Iraq's foreign minister, Mohammed Saeed al-Sabir.

In London, the Ministry of Defence said it had not yet been informed. But a spokesman added: "The UK has never attempted to conceal its use of depleted uranium ammunition in the Gulf."

Mr Sabir's letter focused on what he called an admission by the UK Foreign Office on April 30 that "British tanks used depleted uranium shells during the Gulf war on orders from the British Ministry of Defence".

It said: "A number of diseases, unfamiliar in the past, have been registered, such as foetal and bone deformities and other cases that cannot be explained, such as loss of hair and strange skin diseases. In addition, there have been reports of children dying in the bombed areas suffer from such diseases, in addition to rising cases of child leukaemia."

Depleted uranium is used to give added density and weight to shells, making them highly effective in piercing tank armour. It is not technically radioactive, though when it burns and oxidises after hitting a target it forms into small particles which can be toxic.

It has been claimed that the substance could be one of the causes of Gulf war syndrome. Meanwhile one of President Saddam Hussein's daughters, said to be suffering from a rare blood disease, belonged to her former husband, the head of Iraq's special police who was shot dead in Jordan.

Jordanian newspapers said last Sunday that a bank in Amman had promised to provide a loan to compensate the interest worth $30,000 on an account opened by her former husband, Saddam Hussein.

Diplomats said it was the first clear evidence that Iraq was trying to recover money, possibly tens of millions of dollars, spent out of Baghdad by its sons, Kamil and his brother, Hussein, who were killed in the Gulf war.

The two men, defectors in 1990, denied that they were involved in the recovery of money. They were overthrown by the returned six month later, and the two men were arrested and sentenced to death.

They were overthrown by the returned six month later, and the two men were arrested and sentenced to death.

They were overthrown by the returned six month later, and the two men were arrested and sentenced to death.

They were overthrown by the returned six month later, and the two men were arrested and sentenced to death.

GUARDIAN WEEKLY
June 7 1998

Danish vote averts crisis in Europe

Stephen Bates in Copenhagen

DANES averted a major crisis in the European Union last week as they endorsed the Amsterdam treaty in their constitutional referendum.

The result — a 55.1 to 44.9 per cent majority on a 76 per cent turnout — was more comfortable than had been predicted. But it showed that nearly half the population remains implacably hostile to the EU.

Police reinforcements were standing by in the capital to forestall trouble from opponents of EU membership. After a similar result in the 1992 referendum there were riots in the city.

The result came as a massive relief to the Social Democratic coalition government of Poul Mikkelsen, who said: "The EU has never been a crisis for Denmark. It has been a source of pride and security."

Mr Mikkelsen said: "The EU has never been a crisis for Denmark. It has been a source of pride and security."

Mr Mikkelsen said: "The EU has never been a crisis for Denmark. It has been a source of pride and security."

Mr Mikkelsen said: "The EU has never been a crisis for Denmark. It has been a source of pride and security."

Mr Mikkelsen said: "The EU has never been a crisis for Denmark. It has been a source of pride and security."

Mr Mikkelsen said: "The EU has never been a crisis for Denmark. It has been a source of pride and security."

Mr Mikkelsen said: "The EU has never been a crisis for Denmark. It has been a source of pride and security."

Mr Mikkelsen said: "The EU has never been a crisis for Denmark. It has been a source of pride and security."

Mr Mikkelsen said: "The EU has never been a crisis for Denmark. It has been a source of pride and security."

Mr Mikkelsen said: "The EU has never been a crisis for Denmark. It has been a source of pride and security."

Mr Mikkelsen said: "The EU has never been a crisis for Denmark. It has been a source of pride and security."

Child porn verdict stuns Net lawyers

Ian Traynor in Bonn

IN A landmark verdict that stunned lawyers, experts, and multi-media businesses, a Munich court last week convicted a former executive of an online service provider for aiding and abetting the spread of child pornography.

The two-year suspended sentence handed down to Felix Sommer, the former head of the CompuServe online service in Germany, was believed to be the first time anywhere in the world that a representative of a firm providing access to the Internet had been criminalised because of the content of the material available in its cyberspace.

But later the prosecution called for an acquittal, revising its views and agreeing with the defence that Sommer could not have been expected to control the content of the huge volume of material on the Web. The Bavarian case, which followed from police raids on CompuServe's Munich offices in 1995, was closely watched by German and international experts since it is thought to be the first criminal trial relating to censorship, regulation, and control of cyberspace.

Germany's biggest online service, Deutsche Telekom's T-Online, called the verdict a "huge surprise", while Bonn officials dealing with privacy and censorship regulations doubted the conviction "irritating".

Taxing the net, page 19

The US Dollar Account

LEADING INTEREST RATES

If you're looking for a savings account which gives you offshore confidentiality and some of the most attractive rates currently available, and provides the convenience of dealing in US Dollars — then Alliance & Leicester International's US Dollar Account is ideal for you.

Tiered rates of interest mean the more you save, the more you earn, but you can easily access your money with 30 days' notice.

Interest is paid without the deduction of tax.

And you have the security of knowing that your money is discreetly safe with Alliance & Leicester International on the Isle of Man — one of the world's most highly regulated and confidential financial centres.

INVESTMENT	US DOLLAR Account
10 days (gross p.a.)	5.40%
30 days (gross p.a.)	5.40%
60 days (gross p.a.)	5.40%
90 days (gross p.a.)	5.40%
120 days (gross p.a.)	5.40%
180 days (gross p.a.)	5.40%
240 days (gross p.a.)	5.40%
360 days (gross p.a.)	5.40%

Above rates are gross per annum.

AND A HIGH LEVEL OF SERVICE

Running your account is designed to be as easy as it would be if you were dealing with a mainland company.

You can contact us 24 hours a day, by phone, fax, or post, to request information about your account.

And of course your account will be handled in the strictest confidentiality, by offshore experts.

To take advantage of our new US Dollar accounts, just fill out this coupon, or phone us now on (+44 1624) 663566.

Alliance & Leicester International Ltd, PO Box 236, 10-12 Prospect Hill, Douglas, Isle of Man, IM99 1JF, Great Britain. Telephone (+44 1624) 663566.

For more information, please contact us on (+44 1624) 663566.

NAME _____

ADDRESS _____

POSTCODE _____

DAYTIME TEL NO. _____

EVENING TEL NO. _____

Post to: Alliance & Leicester International Ltd, PO Box 236, 10-12 Prospect Hill, Douglas, Isle of Man, IM99 1JF, Great Britain.

with healthy returns

LEADING INTEREST RATES

If you're looking for a savings account which gives you offshore confidentiality and some of the most attractive rates currently available, and provides the convenience of dealing in US Dollars — then Alliance & Leicester International's US Dollar Account is ideal for you.

Tiered rates of interest mean the more you save, the more you earn, but you can easily access your money with 30 days' notice.

Interest is paid without the deduction of tax.

And you have the security of knowing that your money is discreetly safe with Alliance & Leicester International on the Isle of Man — one of the world's most highly regulated and confidential financial centres.

INVESTMENT	US DOLLAR Account
10 days (gross p.a.)	5.40%
30 days (gross p.a.)	5.40%
60 days (gross p.a.)	5.40%
90 days (gross p.a.)	5.40%
120 days (gross p.a.)	5.40%
180 days (gross p.a.)	5.40%
240 days (gross p.a.)	5.40%
360 days (gross p.a.)	5.40%

Above rates are gross per annum.

AND A HIGH LEVEL OF SERVICE

Running your account is designed to be as easy as it would be if you were dealing with a mainland company.

You can contact us 24 hours a day, by phone, fax, or post, to request information about your account.

And of course your account will be handled in the strictest confidentiality, by offshore experts.

To take advantage of our new US Dollar accounts, just fill out this coupon, or phone us now on (+44 1624) 663566.

Alliance & Leicester International Ltd, PO Box 236, 10-12 Prospect Hill, Douglas, Isle of Man, IM99 1JF, Great Britain. Telephone (+44 1624) 663566.

For more information, please contact us on (+44 1624) 663566.

NAME _____

ADDRESS _____

POSTCODE _____

DAYTIME TEL NO. _____

EVENING TEL NO. _____

Post to: Alliance & Leicester International Ltd, PO Box 236, 10-12 Prospect Hill, Douglas, Isle of Man, IM99 1JF, Great Britain.

French vote on genocide riles Turks

Jon Henley in Paris

A DIPLOMATIC row flared between France and Turkey last week after the French national assembly voted to recognise the genocide of as many as 1.5 million Armenians by Turkey.

The motion, tabled by a cross-party group led by Patrick Devedjian, a Gaullist MP who is a descendant of one of the massacre survivors, states simply: "France publicly recognises the Armenian genocide of 1915."

It was passed unanimously by 30 deputies present in the 577-seat legislature. If the bill is passed by the senate, France — which has one of the largest Armenian communities in Europe — will join Russia and Canada in using the term "genocide" to describe the deaths of between 1.1 and 1.5 million Armenians in Ottoman Turkey between 1915 and 1923.

Turkey denies the deaths constitute genocide, insisting that only about 300,000 Turks and Armenians died as a result of civil war on land that is now eastern Turkey and Syria.

But Armenian groups and human rights activists say the community was driven en masse from eastern Turkey for fear it would ally itself with Russian forces then advancing in the Caucasus, and that the exodus was marked by systematic atrocities, mass killings and summary executions.

The Turkish prime minister, Mesut Yilmaz, wrote to the French counterpart, Lionel Jospin, to say the motion would antagonise Turks and harm political and trade relations.

The Air France chairman, Jean-Cyril Spicotta, agreed to meet representatives of pilots' unions on Tuesday to discuss ending a strike that could affect the World Cup soccer tournament.

About 88 per cent of the company's pilots have joined the strike, which forced the cancellation of 80 per cent of the airline's flights on Monday. Most of the planes flying were operated by charter companies.

Australian swimmer Susie Maroney, with the cage designed to protect her from sharks, sets off from the Mexican island of Isla Mujeres at the start of her swim to Cuba. Her 205km epic, which lasted two nights and a day, set a new world record in unassisted ocean swimming. PHOTOGRAPH BY CLAUDIO CRUZ

Net closes on Suharto family riches

Nick Cumming-Bruce in Jakarta

THE TROOPS, tanks and barbed-wire barricades that guarded Jakarta's Grand Hyatt Hotel against rampaging mobs have gone, but the threat to the Suharto family's interests in one of the capital's richest hotels may be just beginning.

In a bungalow a kilometre away, a dozen lawyers and economists are working on a strategy to unravel the vast web of businesses and privileges amassed by former President Suharto's family and cronies during three decades of power.

"We will gather information from the public on everything," Albert Hasbiwan, a newspaper proprietor and member of the national human rights commission, who leads the group, promises. He has self-styled himself as the Commission of Concerned Citizens on State Assets will try to pull together a case for legal action. "We will deliver this information to the attorney-general's office," he says.

Only a short time after the president resigned and before the group had even adopted its objectives, faces and letters were collating in, with details of alleged financial abuses by the former first family. One says the Hyatt, partly owned by one of Mr Suharto's sons, has not paid taxes, courtesy of a 10-year exemption.

After the mob fury that targeted businesses identified with the Suhartos and their cronies, politicians and reformers are taking up the demand for retribution in a city where even street-corner child vendors are hawkling photocopies of a list of the Suharto family's businesses.

"Everybody thinks this wealth should return where it belongs, to the people of Indonesia," argues Yusuf, a student who took part in the occupation of parliament. "We understand the Suharto wealth is very large and if we gather it back we may be able to pay off all our debts," claims Iskandarnata, an economics student. "I want to see Suharto on trial."

Mr Hasbiwan is only one of a series of investigations into businesses that control a huge slice of national wealth. "In 1995 there was a purging of communists," says one finance company executive, alluding to the bloody upheavals that brought Mr Suharto to power. "In 1998 there will be a purge of first family interests."

A minister for investment has promised to examine the tax breaks handed out to companies linked to the Suharto family. Far more sensitive is the promise by Indonesia's state oil and gas agency, Pertamina, to cut away the web of corruption. Its management reveals that at least 120 companies and associates are hawkling photocopies of a list of the Suharto family's businesses.

Statistical data hardly begins to expose how the old autocrat's relatives fed on one of the financial grannies now keeping Indonesia's ailing economy alive.

Even their oil industry interests are only a fragment of the assets acquired by a family that in later years was avidly courted by foreign corporations and banks. Michael Beckman, an author, says he has identified 1,247 separate, active companies to which Suharto's family members have significant shares.

Behind them are the patungas or charitable foundations, a key vehicle for Mr Suharto's financial interests, and never audited during his 32 years in power.

GUARDIAN WEEKLY
June 7 1998

GUARDIAN WEEKLY
June 7 1998

Martin Walker

This latest "vanishing fisheries" crisis comes just as British and European ministers are scrambling to resolve the last one, a plan to require all European Union fishing vessels to fit transponders so that their movements can be tracked by satellite, at a cost of more than $8,000 per boat. Britain wants the EU to insist that not only European boats, but all boats fishing in EU waters, should be required to fit them.

the marine harvest. Two years ago, WWF and the food giant Unilever jointly set up the Marine Stewardship Council, with a pledge from Unilever only to use fish from sustainable stocks. That far-sightedness agreement depends entirely on the quality of that inexact science of estimating fish stocks in the sea. The forthcoming announcement by Ices that its earlier estimates of Barents Sea stocks were wrong undermines the entire strategy.

WASHINGTON DIARY
Martin Kettia

Washington's official line in response to the Indian and Pakistan crisis is an extremely wide-ranging shrug of the shoulders. It says that the world has exaggerated and oversimplified the ability of the US to orchestrate and enforce a post-cold war Pax Americana. At a White House press conference, Clinton's spokesman, Mike McCurry, was asked: "What does it say about the president's clout in international affairs that both India and now Pakistan have summarily rejected his advice?"

against Iraq, one of the world's most highly militarized states, and that it took place in one of the most important regions of the globe, whether politically, economically, or militarily. All this highlighted the contrast between the abject collapse of the old Soviet order that had preceded it and the devastatingly effective success of the American-led alliance.

What has become clear since 1991, however, is that the Gulf war coalition was not a typical feature of the post-cold war world. Subsequent

Comment, page 12
Washington Post, page 18

A map of the Gulf of Guinea region. The coastline of West Africa is shown, with labels for BOKO, CAMEROON, RIO MUNI, and GABON. A scale bar indicates 80km.

"This is an insult to the intelligence of the Italian people," said Falco Accame, chairman of an association representing the victims of violence in the armed forces.

He called on President Oscar Luigi Scalfaro to appoint a new commission with wider powers. He also criticized the commission for failing to go to Somalia and for obtaining evidence from only about 10 percent of potential witnesses.

10% discount*

P[♥]

PPP Healthcare Inc. wishes to support you

Page and no. of birth _____
Married/never married _____
Address _____
Telephone _____
Toll No. Day _____
Date of birth _____
When would you rate _____
No. of children under _____
*If you insured separately _____
LAME ☐ Cystitis ☐ M

(V) 1094-30099-9 The exchange rates used are... details about the PTP headbase International Health I...
 Dept. upon Phillips house, Crumcut Road, Ryndberg, Wa...
 Summary...
 Municipal country of residence...
 ...for...
 ...begin... March...
 ...in which you reside, check whether ☐ World...
 most of your time in any of the following countries, please m...
 the ☐ Saudi Arabia/Ukraine ☐ In these countries, please m...

those presenting at the time the charges were paid.
and a signature line. Post to PPT headquarters,
Kent, TN 37131, UK.
Name: _____
Nationality: _____
Fax No: _____
Partner's date of birth: _____
I am ☐ EU/USA/Canada ☐ Europe Inc UK ☐
My stay was: _____ • Reference: MP 9000

"This is an insult to the intelligence of the Italian people," said Falco Accame, chairman of an association representing the victims of violence in the armed forces.

He called on President Oscar Luigi Scalfaro to appoint a new commission with wider powers. He also criticized the commission for failing to go to Somalia and for obtaining evidence from only about 10 percent of potential witnesses.

10% discount*

P
PPH healthcare
*able to support you

Please send me further details about the PPH healthcare International Business Direct point to point. I belong to Marlborough/Marble. ☐ Germany

Address _____

Postcode _____ Principal country at _____

Tel No. Day _____ Home _____ Fax _____

Date of birth _____ Signature, no. car no. _____

When would you need your down to hell? _____

No of children under 16 ☐ Are in which you require _____

*If you intend leaving most of your time in any of the following

Land ☐ Ocean ☐ Make ☐ Small Area/Robert/Robert

1. The first step is to identify the problem or question that needs to be answered. This involves understanding the context and the specific requirements of the task.

End 'emotive aid appeals'

Lucy Patton

CLARE Short provoked anger among aid agencies last week when she urged them to end humanitarian appeals that make people "fleece and turn away".

Warning of compassion fatigue, the international Development Secretary encouraged agencies to use positive advertising to attract funds for longer term development in poorer countries.

But Peter Walker, director of disaster policy for the International Federation of Red Cross and Red Crescent Societies, hit back with a defence of humanitarian aid work after Ms Short's speech to a London conference.

"It is a little bit like blaming 999 emergency crews because we have a lot of road accidents," Mr Walker said, describing Ms Short's speech as "good analysis, wrong conclusion".

Ms Short told the Dispatches from Disaster Zones conference: "In recent years, there has been an increase in humanitarian aid and a reduction of aid for development."

"If it is all humanitarian, we are just going round in an endless cycle that never reaches a solution. The cycle is fantastically destructive."

She added: "Out of genuine compassion, we are trapped in a destructive cycle that is preventing us mobilising the political will to go forward."

"What I'd like to consider is that we cease to do those kinds of appeals. We could do positive advertising. I don't believe there is a lack of compassion among people, but there is a deep despondency that is paralyzing."

The director of the European Commission Humanitarian Office, Alberto Navarro, said humanitarianism was not responsible for conflicts. Humanitarians and those involved in development were two sides of the same coin. They had the same objectives.

A spokeswoman for Ms Short's department said later: "Her comments were in no way a criticism of the valuable work done by non-governmental organisations (NGOs)."

"The Department for International Development (DFID) has always supported their efforts in bringing urgently needed humanitarian assistance to those who need it and will continue to do so."

"What we must remember, and why the Secretary of State warned of so-called compassion fatigue, is that the media only ever tends to show negative images from the developing world — painful, distressing pictures which, while prompting an emotional response, also persuade the public that this is the only story to be told from the developing world, that of suffering, famine and death."

"This could not be further from the truth. The DFID, together with developing countries and NGOs, is involved in hundreds of projects which encourage sustainable development, projects which are helping the developing world to overcome and prevent humanitarian crises such as the one we have witnessed in Sudan."

The conference was held amid the escalating crisis in Sudan, where an estimated 350,000 children and adults are surviving after decades of civil war.

The event debated how the press and aid agencies inform the public about humanitarian disasters overseas.

Comment, page 12

Holiday season begins with safety warnings

Ian Traynor in Bonn and Keith Harper

ACROSS-channel ferry carrying thousands of British and foreign tourists between Dover and Calais was condemned as unsafe in a survey of European car and passenger ferries published last week, while a British channel ferry was also found to be hazardous when inspected last month.

SeaFrance's 17-year-old ferry, Renol, plying the Dover-Calais route with a capacity of 1,800 passengers, was found to be at sea with its inflatable lifeboats locked and two lifejackets on board, and two doors to the cargo deck defective and open during the voyage.

The Stena Antim, belonging to the Dover-based P&O-Stena Line and until recently plying the Newhaven-Dieppe route, was also found to be faulty, with safety features poorly maintained, a bow door defect, inadequate fireproofing, and an emergency exit locked during the voyage.

It was the subject of a spot check on April 10 by a team of undercover marine surveyors working for ADAC, Germany's main automobile association.

P&O-Stena said its ferry, which carries 1,380 passengers, was taken out of service on April 22 as part of the company's new business plan. SeaFrance described the ADAC findings as "absurd" and insisted that all its ships were "absolutely safe". From Calais, Christian Taccu, SeaFrance's commercial director, said there was "absolutely no problem" with the Renol.

Robert Sauter, the Munich-based director of the ADAC survey, which examined 30 European ferries, said that the two Channel ferries were the only North European ships to emerge with negative findings.

"Shocking safety shortcomings still exist on many passenger ferries in Europe. In an emergency where there is no safe haven, passengers can only rely on their good fortune," says the report.

Meanwhile a plan to halve air safety margins in response to congested skies could have disastrous consequences unless safeguards are added, experts have warned.

New rules mean that within three years aircraft at high altitude over Europe will be separated in height by 1,000 feet instead of 2,000.

Airlines from eastern and southern Europe, which lack the technology to cope with the new regulations governing distance between aircraft, have fuelled fears of increased near-misses.

The changes, which are expected to be introduced by 2001 after trials next year, will mean that up to double the number of aircraft will be able to fly at high altitudes over Europe. The move will lead to significant fuel savings for the airlines.

The Civil Aviation Authority welcomed the changes, "But it has a well under way to introduce the scheme, which would have complete backing by our own air traffic control system," a spokesman said.

"There is no threat to safety because advances in technology allow this to happen."

But the Splice phenomenon does end — as it must, given the void left by the member who most embodied Cliff Power — obscenity beckons, except for Ginger, who is well under way to introduce the scheme, which would have complete backing by our own air traffic control system," a spokesman said.

There is no threat to safety because advances in technology allow this to happen."

But the Splice phenomenon does end — as it must, given the void left by the member who most embodied Cliff Power — obscenity beckons, except for Ginger, who is well under way to introduce the scheme, which would have complete backing by our own air traffic control system," a spokesman said.

There is no threat to safety because advances in technology allow this to happen."

But the Splice phenomenon does end — as it must, given the void left by the member who most embodied Cliff Power — obscenity beckons, except for Ginger, who is well under way to introduce the scheme, which would have complete backing by our own air traffic control system," a spokesman said.

There is no threat to safety because advances in technology allow this to happen."

But the Splice phenomenon does end — as it must, given the void left by the member who most embodied Cliff Power — obscenity beckons, except for Ginger, who is well under way to introduce the scheme, which would have complete backing by our own air traffic control system," a spokesman said.

There is no threat to safety because advances in technology allow this to happen."

But the Splice phenomenon does end — as it must, given the void left by the member who most embodied Cliff Power — obscenity beckons, except for Ginger, who is well under way to introduce the scheme, which would have complete backing by our own air traffic control system," a spokesman said.

There is no threat to safety because advances in technology allow this to happen."

But the Splice phenomenon does end — as it must, given the void left by the member who most embodied Cliff Power — obscenity beckons, except for Ginger, who is well under way to introduce the scheme, which would have complete backing by our own air traffic control system," a spokesman said.

There is no threat to safety because advances in technology allow this to happen."

But the Splice phenomenon does end — as it must, given the void left by the member who most embodied Cliff Power — obscenity beckons, except for Ginger, who is well under way to introduce the scheme, which would have complete backing by our own air traffic control system," a spokesman said.

There is no threat to safety because advances in technology allow this to happen."

But the Splice phenomenon does end — as it must, given the void left by the member who most embodied Cliff Power — obscenity beckons, except for Ginger, who is well under way to introduce the scheme, which would have complete backing by our own air traffic control system," a spokesman said.

There is no threat to safety because advances in technology allow this to happen."

Geri Halliwell walking away after two years' fame PHOTO: REYNOLDS

The bubble that went pop

Caroline Sullivan

SO FAREWELL, then, Ginger. And farewell, probably sooner rather than later, Scary, Sporty, Baby and Posh. Geri Halliwell has officially left the Spice Girls.

Although the remaining four maintain they'll carry on without their de facto leader, history is against them. The Spice Supreme never recovered from Dina Ross's departure, and the Jackson Five were sunk when Michael went solo.

When the Spice phenomenon does end — as it must, given the void left by the member who most embodied Cliff Power — obscenity beckons, except for Ginger, who is well under way to introduce the scheme, which would have complete backing by our own air traffic control system," a spokesman said.

There is no threat to safety because advances in technology allow this to happen."

But the Splice phenomenon does end — as it must, given the void left by the member who most embodied Cliff Power — obscenity beckons, except for Ginger, who is well under way to introduce the scheme, which would have complete backing by our own air traffic control system," a spokesman said.

There is no threat to safety because advances in technology allow this to happen."

But the Splice phenomenon does end — as it must, given the void left by the member who most embodied Cliff Power — obscenity beckons, except for Ginger, who is well under way to introduce the scheme, which would have complete backing by our own air traffic control system," a spokesman said.

There is no threat to safety because advances in technology allow this to happen."

But the Splice phenomenon does end — as it must, given the void left by the member who most embodied Cliff Power — obscenity beckons, except for Ginger, who is well under way to introduce the scheme, which would have complete backing by our own air traffic control system," a spokesman said.

There is no threat to safety because advances in technology allow this to happen."

But the Splice phenomenon does end — as it must, given the void left by the member who most embodied Cliff Power — obscenity beckons, except for Ginger, who is well under way to introduce the scheme, which would have complete backing by our own air traffic control system," a spokesman said.

There is no threat to safety because advances in technology allow this to happen."

But the Splice phenomenon does end — as it must, given the void left by the member who most embodied Cliff Power — obscenity beckons, except for Ginger, who is well under way to introduce the scheme, which would have complete backing by our own air traffic control system," a spokesman said.

supposedly earned £13 million each in just under two years. But like many may not come to the fore for the loss of the celebrity which was their driving force. They have always admitted fame was their primary goal.

Unimpeded by concerns about credibility, the girls did what was necessary, with no TV show, no promotional deal, no embarrassing.

For the Spice Girls music was more a marketing tool than an artistic passion; none the less, they have produced some pretty good records.

— Vannabe and Spice Up Your Life. These trendy pop classics will see these ladies have a taste of the Waterford Whinn's Young Guns.

Only time will tell if Ginger and company really have made it. The bubble has burst, but the Spice Girls are still here, and they have survived. As it stands, the only barrier they have surmounted is that separating art and commerce.

After the breakdown of their relationship.

The rift has come at a delicate time for the pair, who are wrestling the outcome of protection and defence appeals that could see her sent back to jail with a minimum of 15 years before parole, or cleared of her involuntary manslaughter and allowed to return home.

Shortly before she was dismissed, the Bolton Globe newspaper reported that the attorney now doubted her innocence. The claim was based on her alleged comments to state trooper, Ray Cioleketa, when she was arrested for drink-driving.

After Ms Sharp had subsequently pleaded guilty to the drunk driving charge she told reporters she was "appalled" by Mr Cioleketa's allegations. She then accused the trooper of responding by demanding an apology and threatening legal action.

The three remaining lawyers said in Woodward's innocence. Her British lawyer, Paul Barnett, said: "It was an unnecessary and unfortunate twist to a poor girl being driven with breath tests to the outcome of her appeal. It is very unfair."

William Condry, the co-counsel and Guardian writer, has died at the age of 80.

William Condry, the co-counsel and Guardian writer, has died at the age of 80.

William Condry, the co-counsel and Guardian writer, has died at the age of 80.

William Condry, the co-counsel and Guardian writer, has died at the age of 80.

GUARDIAN WEEKLY
June 7 1998

In Brief

MILLIONS of bottles and cans of potentially contaminated soft drinks were withdrawn from sale after traces of benzene, a cancer-causing chemical, was found in supplies of carbon dioxide used to make the drinks.

RAILTRACK is expected to sign a contract that will secure the £5.4 billion Channel tunnel link by agreeing to financial backing for the first stage of the track.

MORE than 900 women who graduated from Cambridge before 1948 are to receive their degree with the pomp and ceremony previously denied them because of their gender.

THE Government has rejected calls to extend planned legislation to ban crimes to include homophobic assaults, and fears that the move would "blur the anti-racist message".

A 12-YEAR-OLD boy became the youngest person on the new register of sex offenders after a jury found him guilty of raping a five-year-old girl.

FEARs that the Lottery would be outed as a scam have been proved unfounded as the British Aid Foundation revealed an 8 per cent increase in profits last week. Meanwhile the lottery reported a 14 per cent rise in profits to £80 million a year, despite a fall in sales.

THE Government is set to boost the incomes of Britain's one million poorest pensioners by restoring the link with average earnings broken by the Conservative 18 years ago.

THE Rev Andrew Swindells, a chaplain at Tonbridge School in Kent, has been charged in Germany with insulting child pornography.

HOPES of an end to the beef ban case when the European Commission said it would formally recommend that British exports should be allowed again later this year.

ON WHITTAKER, who lost his right foot after a car crash 18 years ago, has conquered Mt Everest on his third attempt.

EUROPEAN Union ministers have agreed that a decision on the application in one member state will apply in the 14 others.

ALEXANDER, a medic for treating Alzheimer's disease, was found after promising results from the biggest trial undertaken into a drug for the disease.

WILLIAM CONDRY, the co-counsel and Guardian writer, has died at the age of 80.

William Condry, the co-counsel and Guardian writer, has died at the age of 80.

William Condry, the co-counsel and Guardian writer, has died at the age of 80.

Shake-up of prosecution service

Clare Dyer

A NEW chief executive will move into the beleaguered Crown Prosecution Service this week to start a massive shake-up after a damning report into the tenure of Dame Barbara Mills as Director of Public Prosecutions.

Mark Addison, former private secretary to Baroness Thatcher, will start work on a root-and-branch reorganisation of the £200 million-a-year service, shifting power from the London headquarters and into the hands of local prosecutors in 42 new areas.

Dame Barbara, who has been DPP since 1992 and whose contract expires next April, has agreed to stand down as soon as her successor is appointed. The long-awaited report from a team headed by Sir John Gledhill, retired magistrates court judge, concludes that a 1993 reorganisation of the service under Dame Barbara was "a mistake". The organisation had become "too centralised and bureaucratic".

It recommends freeing senior lawyers from paper-pushing and putting them back in the courts prosecuting criminals.

It says: "In various respects there has not been the improvement in the effectiveness and efficiency of the prosecution process which was expected to result from the setting up of the CPS in 1984."

Sir John's inquiry was set up by Labour when it came to power last year, to address accusations that the CPS discontinued too many prosecutions, downgraded charges so cases could be heard more cheaply in the magistrates' court rather than the crown court, and had too many cases thrown out by judges.

The report takes the highest rates of discontinuation were for the serious charges of violence against the person and sexual offences, and the lowest for motoring offences. Likewise, the few statistics available showed downgrading of charges happened most often in cases of serious crime, public order offences and traffic accidents causing death.

More than half of all acquittals in crown court result from the judge throwing the case out or directing the jury to acquit. Though there were often good reasons, such as a witness failing to appear, "the statistics are a cause for concern", the report says, adding: "CPS performance is not as good as it should be."

Sir John's team found that the 1993 reorganisation weakened the service into a national body. "Nevertheless we believe that the price paid in the over-centralisation of management was too great... We estimate that the top 400 lawyers in the CPS spent less than a third of their time

charges of violence against the person and sexual offences, and the lowest for motoring offences. Likewise, the few statistics available showed downgrading of charges happened most often in cases of serious crime, public order offences and traffic accidents causing death.

More than half of all acquittals in crown court result from the judge throwing the case out or directing the jury to acquit. Though there were often good reasons, such as a witness failing to appear, "the statistics are a cause for concern", the report says, adding: "CPS performance is not as good as it should be."

Sir John's team found that the 1993 reorganisation weakened the service into a national body. "Nevertheless we believe that the price paid in the over-centralisation of management was too great... We estimate that the top 400 lawyers in the CPS spent less than a third of their time

charges of violence against the person and sexual offences, and the lowest for motoring offences. Likewise, the few statistics available showed downgrading of charges happened most often in cases of serious crime, public order offences and traffic accidents causing death.

More than half of all acquittals in crown court result from the judge throwing the case out or directing the jury to acquit. Though there were often good reasons, such as a witness failing to appear, "the statistics are a cause for concern", the report says, adding: "CPS performance is not as good as it should be."

Sir John's team found that the 1993 reorganisation weakened the service into a national body. "Nevertheless we believe that the price paid in the over-centralisation of management was too great... We estimate that the top 400 lawyers in the CPS spent less than a third of their time

charges of violence against the person and sexual offences, and the lowest for motoring offences. Likewise, the few statistics available showed downgrading of charges happened most often in cases of serious crime, public order offences and traffic accidents causing death.

charges of violence against the person and sexual offences, and the lowest for motoring offences. Likewise, the few statistics available showed downgrading of charges happened most often in cases of serious crime, public order offences and traffic accidents causing death.

More than half of all acquittals in crown court result from the judge throwing the case out or directing the jury to acquit. Though there were often good reasons, such as a witness failing to appear, "the statistics are a cause for concern", the report says, adding: "CPS performance is not as good as it should be."

Sir John's team found that the 1993 reorganisation weakened the service into a national body. "Nevertheless we believe that the price paid in the over-centralisation of management was too great... We estimate that the top 400 lawyers in the CPS spent less than a third of their time

charges of violence against the person and sexual offences, and the lowest for motoring offences. Likewise, the few statistics available showed downgrading of charges happened most often in cases of serious crime, public order offences and traffic accidents causing death.

charges of violence against the person and sexual offences, and the lowest for motoring offences. Likewise, the few statistics available showed downgrading of charges happened most often in cases of serious crime, public order offences and traffic accidents causing death.

More than half of all acquittals in crown court result from the judge throwing the case out or directing the jury to acquit. Though there were often good reasons, such as a witness failing to appear, "the statistics are a cause for concern", the report says, adding: "CPS performance is not as good as it should be."

Sir John's team found that the 1993 reorganisation weakened the service into a national body. "Nevertheless we believe that the price paid in the over-centralisation of management was too great... We estimate that the top 400 lawyers in the CPS spent less than a third of their time

charges of violence against the person and sexual offences, and the lowest for motoring offences. Likewise, the few statistics available showed downgrading of charges happened most often in cases of serious crime, public order offences and traffic accidents causing death.

charges of violence against the person and sexual offences, and the lowest for motoring offences. Likewise, the few statistics available showed downgrading of charges happened most often in cases of serious crime, public order offences and traffic accidents causing death.

More than half of all acquittals in crown court result from the judge throwing the case out or directing the jury to acquit. Though there were often good reasons, such as a witness failing to appear, "the statistics are a cause for concern", the report says, adding: "CPS performance is not as good as it should be."

Sir John's team found that the 1993 reorganisation weakened the service into a national body. "Nevertheless we believe that the price paid in the over-centralisation of management was too great... We estimate that the top 400 lawyers in the CPS spent less than a third of their time

charges of violence against the person and sexual offences, and the lowest for motoring offences. Likewise, the few statistics available showed downgrading of charges happened most often in cases of serious crime, public order offences and traffic accidents causing death.

charges of violence against the person and sexual offences, and the lowest for motoring offences. Likewise, the few statistics available showed downgrading of charges happened most often in cases of serious crime, public order offences and traffic accidents causing death.

More than half of all acquittals in crown court result from the judge throwing the case out or directing the jury to acquit. Though there were often good reasons, such as a witness failing to appear, "the statistics are a cause for concern", the report says, adding: "CPS performance is not as good as it should be."

Sir John's team found that the 1993 reorganisation weakened the service into a national body. "Nevertheless we believe that the price paid in the over-centralisation of management was too great... We estimate that the top 400 lawyers in the CPS spent less than a third of their time

charges of violence against the person and sexual offences, and the lowest for motoring offences. Likewise, the few statistics available showed downgrading of charges happened most often in cases of serious crime, public order offences and traffic accidents causing death.

charges of violence against the person and sexual offences, and the lowest for motoring offences. Likewise, the few statistics available showed downgrading of charges happened most often in cases of serious crime, public order offences and traffic accidents causing death.

More than half of all acquittals in crown court result from the judge throwing the case out or directing the jury to acquit. Though there were often good reasons, such as a witness failing to appear, "the statistics are a cause for concern", the report says, adding: "CPS performance is not as good as it should be."

Sir John's team found that the 1993 reorganisation weakened the service into a national body. "Nevertheless we believe that the price paid in the over-centralisation of management was too great... We estimate that the top 400 lawyers in the CPS spent less than a third of their time

charges of violence against the person and sexual offences, and the lowest for motoring offences. Likewise, the few statistics available showed downgrading of charges happened most often in cases of serious crime, public order offences and traffic accidents causing death.

charges of violence against the person and sexual offences, and the lowest for motoring offences. Likewise, the few statistics available showed downgrading of charges happened most often in cases of serious crime, public order offences and traffic accidents causing death.

More than half of all acquittals in crown court result from the judge throwing the case out or directing the jury to acquit. Though there were often good reasons, such as a witness failing to appear, "the statistics are a cause for concern", the report says, adding: "CPS performance is not as good as it should be."

Sir John's team found that the 1993 reorganisation weakened the service into a national body. "Nevertheless we believe that the price paid in the over-centralisation of management was too great... We estimate that the top 400 lawyers in the CPS spent less than a third of their time

charges of violence against the person and sexual offences, and the lowest for motoring offences. Likewise, the few statistics available showed downgrading of charges happened most often in cases of serious crime, public order offences and traffic accidents causing death.

charges of violence against the person and sexual offences, and the lowest for motoring offences. Likewise, the few statistics available showed downgrading of charges happened most often in cases of serious crime, public order offences and traffic accidents causing death.

More than half of all acquittals in crown court result from the judge throwing the case out or directing the jury to acquit. Though there were often good reasons, such as a witness failing to appear, "the statistics are a cause for concern", the report says, adding: "CPS performance is not as good as it should be."

Sir John's team found that the 1993 reorganisation weakened the service into a national body. "Nevertheless we believe that the price paid in the over-centralisation of management was too great... We estimate that the top 400 lawyers in the CPS spent less than a third of their time

charges of violence against the person and sexual offences, and the lowest for motoring offences. Likewise, the few statistics available showed downgrading of charges happened most often in cases of serious crime, public order offences and traffic accidents causing death.

charges of violence against the person and sexual offences, and the lowest for motoring offences. Likewise, the few statistics available showed downgrading of charges happened most often in cases of serious crime, public order offences and traffic accidents causing death.

More than half of all acquittals in crown court result from the judge throwing the case out or directing the jury to acquit. Though there were often good reasons, such as a witness failing to appear, "the statistics are a cause for concern", the report says, adding: "CPS performance is not as good as it should be."

Sir John's team found that the 1993 reorganisation weakened the service into a national body. "Nevertheless we believe that the price paid in the over-centralisation of management was too great... We estimate that the top 400 lawyers in the CPS spent less than a third of their time

charges of violence against the person and sexual offences, and the lowest for motoring offences. Likewise, the few statistics available showed downgrading of charges happened most often in cases of serious crime, public order offences and traffic accidents causing death.

charges of violence against the person and sexual offences, and the lowest for motoring offences. Likewise, the few statistics available showed downgrading of charges happened most often in cases of serious crime, public order offences and traffic accidents causing death.

More than half of all acquittals in crown court result from the judge throwing the case out or directing the jury to acquit. Though there were often good reasons, such as a witness failing to appear, "the statistics are a cause for concern", the report says, adding: "CPS performance is not as good as it should be."

Sir John's team found that the 1993 reorganisation weakened the service into a national body. "Nevertheless we believe that the price paid in the over-centralisation of management was too great... We estimate that the top 400 lawyers in the CPS spent less than a third of their time

charges of violence against the person and sexual offences, and the lowest for motoring offences. Likewise, the few statistics available showed downgrading of charges happened most often in cases of serious crime, public order offences and traffic accidents causing death.

charges of violence against the person and sexual offences, and the lowest for motoring offences. Likewise, the few statistics available showed downgrading of charges happened most often in cases of serious crime, public order offences and traffic accidents causing death.

More than half of all acquittals in crown court result from the judge throwing the case out or directing the jury to acquit. Though there were often good reasons, such as a witness failing to appear, "the statistics are a cause for concern", the report says, adding: "CPS performance is not as good as it should be."

Sir John's team found that the 1993 reorganisation weakened the service into a national body. "Nevertheless we believe that the price paid in the over-centralisation of management was too great... We estimate that the top 400 lawyers in the CPS spent less than a third of their time

charges of violence against the person and sexual offences, and the lowest for motoring offences. Likewise, the few statistics available showed downgrading of charges happened most often in cases of serious crime, public order offences and traffic accidents causing death.

charges of violence against the person and sexual offences, and the lowest for motoring offences. Likewise, the few statistics available showed downgrading of charges happened most often in cases of serious crime, public order offences and traffic accidents causing death.

Lawrence case police chief admits ignorance

Amelia Gantman

THE policeman heading the inquiry admitted last week that he failed to arrest key suspects at the first opportunity because he had misunderstood a basic point of criminal law.

The admission of ignorance by a detective superintendent who had led over murder inquiries during a 30-year career was met with incredulity by relatives of the murdered teenager.

Although the manner of four arrests had been given to the police within hours of the racist murder of the black student, it was two weeks before three of them were arrested. The inquiry has heard that this delay meant police were unable to collect certain forensic evidence.

Detective Superintendent Brian Weeden's mistake was compounded by the failure of another officer to pass on crucial information, the inquiry heard.

Mr Weeden was appointed to head the murder investigation three days after the killing, and led a team of officers for 18 months. He claimed he had not realised he had the power to arrest the main suspects as soon as he had "reasonable grounds for belief" of their guilt.

He said it was only recently — after receiving legal advice — that he realised the arrests could legitimately have been made earlier.

Mr Weeden's admission was greeted with anger by Stephen's father, Neville Lawrence. "I am sick and disgusted to hear a senior police officer of 30 years' experience admit that he did not know the police powers to arrest," he said. "First of all they say it was lack of information. Now they are saying they didn't know the law. What next?"

The Lawrence family's QC, Michael Mansfield, asked Mr Weeden: "Do you find that it is rather disturbing that it has taken you all this time to recognise a basic tenet of criminal law?"

Mr Weeden, who retired in 1994, conceded: "I think it is regrettable."

He said later that suspects in the murder, which took place in Eltham, southeast London, in April 1993, might have been arrested earlier had he been aware of evidence provided by eyewitnesses.

A police informant referred to as "Grant" had told one of Mr Weeden's officers in the days following the murder that a 17-year-old known only as B. had seen the killing from a passing bus but could identify some of the suspects.

Although B was interviewed and statements were taken from him much later, Mr Mansfield revealed that Grant had passed B's name and address to Detective Sergeant John Davidson very soon after the murder.

Mr Weeden admitted that the information provided by B combined with that of another witness, K, would have given him the evidence he needed to arrest "within hours."

Mr Weeden's admission was greeted with anger by Stephen's

Emperor Akihito's coach passes protesters lining The Mall in London

Veterans turn backs on emperor

John Eard

DESPITE weeks of official efforts to spin, cajole and argue their case out of existence, 1,500 Far East prison camp veterans had their angry day in London last week — and left an indelible image of shock and humiliation on the faces of Japanese VIPs passing them in royal procession.

The Japanese Emperor Akihito was half-screened from them at the last moment by the thick glass of a closed carriage. But the beffed constabulary of dignitaries travelling in open coaches to Buckingham Palace could not be concealed.

They stared at the veteran turned backs as a snarl of boos, V-signs and scattered cries of "shame" spread to other sections of the crowd of tens of thousands watching Akihito pass with the Queen along The Mall.

At the palace, like earlier Emperor Akihito received a Garter ribbon for chivalry from the Queen. But he was, unlike previous emperors, dogged by street protest.

Outside Westminster Abbey several hundred ex-Japanese prisoners of war and internees aged between 60 and over 80 again turned their backs as he arrived to lay a wreath on the Grave of the Unknown Warrior. Many wore white scarves and red gloves to drive home their view that the Japanese government will have blood on its hands until it pays compensation and apologises fully for wartime atrocities.

Younger demonstrators joined them. Mark Cribb, aged 29, from Reigate, Surrey, waved a placard saying: "Third World debts aren't too bad to count. But disgusting torture is buried under a Japanese car factory."

But an overwhelming majority of the British public felt it was "important to forgive" Japan, according to a NOP poll issued by the Japanese embassy in London last week.

Later, facing a further two days of demonstrations in Britain, Akihito delivered a speech which his aides described as "a very big step" — an expression of feeling which might well be unique in Japanese history.

Addressing a state banquet at Buckingham Palace, he said: "It truly saddens me that the relationship so nurtured between our two countries should have been marred by the second world war."

"The Emperor and I can now forget the many kinds of suffering so many people have undergone because of that war."

"At the thought of the scars of war that they bear, our hearts are filled with deep sorrow and pain."

"All through our visit here, do thought will never leave our minds. We sincerely hope that such a history will never be repeated between our two nations."

In a warm reply to him, the Queen spoke of a conflict with memories that still caused pain today. But these memories had become "a spur to reconciliation."

After hearing a draft of the Emperor's speech, Marya Day, the solicitor arguing the veterans' case, said: "It goes on to say that the expressions of regret we have already had."

The Mall protest came as a climax of a state welcome on a scale of pageantry. It involved 1,000 troops, a 62-gun salute, and the bands of four Foot Guard regiments.

Japanese embassy officials described Japanese and British flags.

GUARDIAN WEEKLY
June 7 1993

Doctors ignored baby death toll

Bernie Roseley

BRITAIN'S biggest medical disciplinary inquiry ended dramatically last week when three doctors were found to have failed babies' lives by continuing with heart operations even though death rates were well above average.

The case has enormous consequences for the self-regulation of doctors and the autonomy of hospitals. James Wisheart, aged 60, was not only the senior children's heart surgeon but also medical director of the United Bristol Healthcare Trust, James Roylance, aged 67, was its chief executive, and Leonard Dhasman, aged 58, was the junior surgeon. None of them had any previous disciplinary proceedings against them.

The General Medical Council (GMC) looked at 53 operations on babies, 29 of whom died and four of whom were brain-damaged. By the time of his last hole-in-the-heart operation on a baby, Mr Wisheart's mortality rate had reached 69 per cent, compared with a national average at the time of 14 per cent. In the worst of the three, Mr Dhasman had a two in three death rate, compared with the national average of one in 10.

After a record seven months of hearings, the GMC's professional standards committee concluded last week that the operations on six babies, five of whom died, should not have taken place.

But the parents of children who died or were brain-damaged during heart operations at the Bristol Royal Infirmary denounced the GMC investigation. They claimed the committee had examined "only the tip of the iceberg".

Malcolm Cornow, one of the members of the Bristol Children's Heart Group, said he knew of 81 children who were dead or damaged.

Acknowledging that justice needs to be seen to be done, the Health Secretary, Frank Dobson, has been discussing with the parents the scope of the independent inquiry he has promised, even though the GMC will not decide what action to take against the doctors — it could strike them off, admonish or clear them — until later this month.

The parents believe the GMC should have been allowed to police its own. The committee did not look at brain-damaged children, and its traditional remit did not allow it to investigate the competence of the surgeons, even though Mr Wisheart was said to be too slow and Mr Dhasman was alleged never to have "got beyond the learning curve" in operations on tiny babies.

A distraught Jim Stewart, father of Ian, who was the only brain-damaged child to be considered in the original charges but whose case was later struck out, interrupted Sir

Donald Irvine, president of the GMC, as he gave his ruling, denouncing "this sham of a hearing".

The parents allege that the surgeons' high rates of death and brain damage were known to the medical profession and yet nothing was done for years. This context was not explored at the GMC.

Two cardiologists and an anaesthetist working at the Bristol Royal Infirmary at the time have received what are known as "Chapter XV letters" from the GMC, warning that their conduct may be open to question. Their lawyers advised them not to give evidence at the GMC inquiry as a result.

Medical bodies have set extensive reforms in train. Stephen Bolein, the anaesthetist at the hospital who did his best to get the operations stopped by circulating his data to colleagues, was turned as a whistle-blower and left for a job in Australia, alleging he was frozen out of the profession in Britain.

The Department of Health has already warned the profession that it is no longer acceptable for doctors to be unaware of their own mistakes. The British Medical Association and the Royal Colleges, reading the warning on the wall, have in the past few weeks issued guidance to doctors urging them to audit themselves.

They and the GMC have told doctors that whistle-blowing on inadequate colleagues is not dishonourable but is a duty.

Donald Irvine, president of the GMC, as he gave his ruling, denouncing "this sham of a hearing".

The parents allege that the surgeons' high rates of death and brain damage were known to the medical profession and yet nothing was done for years. This context was not explored at the GMC.

Two cardiologists and an anaesthetist working at the Bristol Royal Infirmary at the time have received what are known as "Chapter XV letters" from the GMC, warning that their conduct may be open to question. Their lawyers advised them not to give evidence at the GMC inquiry as a result.

Medical bodies have set extensive reforms in train. Stephen Bolein, the anaesthetist at the hospital who did his best to get the operations stopped by circulating his data to colleagues, was turned as a whistle-blower and left for a job in Australia, alleging he was frozen out of the profession in Britain.

The Department of Health has already warned the profession that it is no longer acceptable for doctors to be unaware of their own mistakes. The British Medical Association and the Royal Colleges, reading the warning on the wall, have in the past few weeks issued guidance to doctors urging them to audit themselves.

They and the GMC have told doctors that whistle-blowing on inadequate colleagues is not dishonourable but is a duty.

They and the GMC have told doctors that whistle-blowing on inadequate colleagues is not dishonourable but is a duty.

They and the GMC have told doctors that whistle-blowing on inadequate colleagues is not dishonourable but is a duty.

Hague alters attack with shadow cabinet reshuffle

Michael Whita

WILLIAM Hague this week admitted the failure of the Conservative's first year in Opposition when he reshuffled his shadow team to bring more effective fire to bear against the most vulnerable points of New Labour's defences.

The most dramatic signal of Mr Hague's determination to expose Tony Blair's inability to deliver all he promised in his famous "five early pledges" was the promotion of the combative ex-prison minister, Ann Widdecombe.

The woman who ruled Michael Howard's leadership hopes with the phrase that he had "something of the night" about him, will now be expected to do the same to the street-smart Frank Dobson — whose health team has yet to reverse rising hospital waiting lists.

Mr Hague also gave a key post to the energetic Francis Maude, who replaces the lacklustre Peter Lilley as shadow chancellor, with the job of tracking Gordon Brown.

Mr Lilley becomes deputy leader. The equally cerebral David Willetts is one of six new names to join the shadow cabinet. He takes over the education portfolio from Stephen Dorrell, Michael Howard (foreign affairs) and John Redwood (trade), both retirees of the right and relatively successful in an underpowered team, say in post.

Sir Norman Fowler, the Great Survivor of Tory reshuffles for 25 years, takes over Sir Brian Mawhinney's Home Office portfolio, while Gillian Shephard, who changed her mind about stepping down, takes his shadowing John Prescott.

Mr Hague's personal ratings have slipped from minus 15 to minus 25 points, while his party has slipped from 37 to 26 per cent against Labour's steady 55 per cent in the latest Mori opinion poll.

Angela Browning, the Conservative education spokeswoman, last week announced that she would be stepping down from the shadow front bench to provide more support for her autistic son.

Mrs Browning, a 51-year-old management consultant, has been MP for Tiverton since 1992. As a Eurosceptic, she was expected to prosper in the Hague era. Instead she announced: "I need to spend more time with my son who is not in good health, and I have decided to return to the backbenches."

The MPs' move reflects growing awareness of the price of public life. The trend is not confined to women. Sir Norman Fowler, father of two girls, retired — temporarily — from the Cabinet in 1990 to "spend more time with his family", a remark which prompted the Thatcherite Nicholas Ridley to say he could not imagine anything worse. Privately many MPs agreed.

Heads gain budget role

John Garval

THE Government completed the Tories' revolution in education when it announced plans to delegate 100 per cent of the schools budget to headteachers and governing bodies, leaving local education authorities with a tightly controlled administrative role.

Stephen Byers, the school standards minister, told the National Association of Head Teachers conference in Eastbourne that every state school would get the financial freedom previously reserved for the grant-maintained sector, established in 1988 as a haven for schools wanting to escape education authority control.

Heads will take over wide-ranging responsibilities, and schools will get their own bank accounts and keep the interest earned on any deposit of public funds.

Mr Byers said they would be able to buy back services from the education authority if they seemed good value for money. Instead of opting out of local authority control, they would have a decision to opt back in for particular functions.

Meanwhile David Hart, general secretary of the National Association of Head Teachers, said a teacher recruitment crisis is threatening to play havoc with the Government's plans to cut class sizes and raise educational standards.

Survey shows Internet fears

IT IS supposed to be the answer to our seemingly endless quest for knowledge, a limitless source of entertainment, and even a means of socialising, writes Sarah Hall.

But far from embracing the brave new world of the Internet, most Britons view it with fear and suspicion, a report published last week reveals. Fears that it aids fraud, creates untraceable computer networks and cultivates porn addicts, abound among the technophobic public.

The survey, by the consumer magazine Which? Online, found people were most concerned about the accessibility of pornography and other illegal materials, with nearly half out of 10 (58 per cent) believing it undermined morality and 72 per cent in favour of regulating.

One in three believed the Internet was a threat to national security. Nearly a quarter (22 per cent) suggested it spawned untraceable computer "anarchists" in danger of losing their grip on sex and represented a grave threat to traditional family life.

The report found only 14 per cent of the nation — some 7 million people — were Internet users. But interest is burgeoning, half signed on in the past year.

Users cited education and business reasons for going online initially, but then e-mailed friends and family, surfed for leisure information and downloaded software.

Union row looms over minimum wage

Ewan MacAskill and Samina Mills

UNIONS were gearing up for a battle with the Government last week after a recommendation that the minimum wage be set at £3.60 an hour — a figure welcomed by employers' representatives but substantially lower than the unions had been fighting for.

Tony Blair received the long-awaited figure from the Low Pay Commission, which was established by the Government last June to decide on a fair minimum wage. The figure for workers aged between 18 and 21 will be lower — about £2.20.

While waiting to denigrate the success of achieving the principle of a minimum wage, union leaders expressed dissatisfaction at its level. Rodney Bickerstaffe, leader of the country's biggest union, Unison, who has been at the forefront of the struggle, said the prospect of a four-year wage freeze was "absolutely unacceptable". But he added: "£3.60 for an hour of anybody's life at the end of the 20th century in one of the richest countries on earth is not something to be proud of."

Ken Cameron, the leading leader of the Fire Brigades Union, described the figure as "a disgrace". He said employers were likely to sack younger workers when they qualified for the higher rate.

Mr Blair will have to decide whether to go along with the recommendation, though it is unlikely he will reject a figure set by a body he has set up.

The unions will hope, he is open to manoeuvring. They have been fighting for a figure between £4 and £4.61, but employers argued against, insisting that companies would have to shed jobs or even refuse to take on workers at that rate.

Sir Colin Marshall, chairman of the Confederation of British Industry, welcomed the figure. "The CBI would find anything between £2.50 and £3.60 acceptable. At that level it is workable."

The minimum wage has been fought over for years, with Tories claiming it would increase unemployment. Labour gave a manifesto commitment to introduce a minimum wage in Europe last July, but did not specify the rate.

A minimum wage is common place elsewhere in Europe but jobs are plentiful. In Europe last July, the government secured agreement to allow British exemption from its introduction. Low pay was an issue in both the past two general elections.

Make the most of your British Expatriate Status

Many expatriates believe, mistakenly, that UK tax concerns only UK residents — a misconception which can prove expensive. It is essential to receive expert professional advice if you are to be free of the UK tax net and capitalise on being an expatriate.

Examples of costly mistakes include:

- ♦ Failing to claim the tax refund due for the year of departure.
- ♦ Failing to take full advantage of the complicated residence rules which determine UK tax status.
- ♦ Wasting the potential benefit of independent taxation of husband and wife.

- ♦ Misunderstanding the new Self-Assessment system.
- ♦ Failing to plan for a return to the UK.

Head Office: Crescent House, Crescent Road, Worthing, Sussex, BN11 1RN, England.
Tel: Worthing (01903) 231545
Fax: (01903) 200668. Offices in Exeter

Established in 1898, we provide a comprehensive tax advisory and compliance service which has helped more than 200,000 British Expatriates to reduce their tax liabilities.

Our booklet "The British Expatriate" provides a guide to the most important ways to make the most of your expatriate status. For your free copy simply complete and return the coupon below.

To: Wilfred T. Fry Limited, Crescent House, Crescent Road, Worthing, Sussex, BN11 1RN, England.
Please send me more details of your personal tax advisory service, together with my free copy of "The British Expatriate"

Name

Address

Date of intended return to UK

The charge of double standards against the Nuclear Five remains unanswerable on any principled ground. The question now is not how to persuade new nuclear members to sign up to the CTBT — once they have tested. It is how to dissuade them from beginning to take this road. The only way of doing so is to hold out the prospect of progress towards a nuclear-free world. This would require a declaration endorsing minimum deterrence as an immediate goal — and minimum means tests, not hundreds or thousands, of strategic nuclear proliferation of nuclear weapons as the longer-term aim. Such a program can only be dissuaded as utterly-eyed or impracticable. The Five are now obliged to answer a simple question: by what other means can more nuclear proliferation be prevented?

The endless crisis of aid

ARE DISASTER appeals n disaster? The plea from Clare Short, Britain's International Development Secretary, for aid agencies to break down an "endless cycle" in which the spotlight is switched on crisis areas, and then off again, has angered and many journalists involved have had increasing doubts whether the current approach is effective or even ethical. Few of those standing the test of time are the "disaster zones" of the World Bank, organised by a coalition of the British agencies, would accept Ma Short's argument that emergency appeals should be stopped altogether. In the short run that would either mean failing to get the money to the people in need or else forcing the agencies to dig deeper into reserves with no guarantee of replenishment. Yet there must be disquiet at the way in which human misery can be reduced to a mere headline and be demoted to a brief item a week later.

The common complaint in these discussions is the lack of analytical depth and perspective both in reporting by the media and in policy formation by agencies and governments. Rwanda and Zaire are part from the Glasgow Media Group argues, too often the tragedies were explained in terms of "crude views of Africans and 'tribal' behaviour"; the heart of the problem was that "public knowledge of the situation was inadequate"; the "international community" was "very limited". Humanitarian aid is no substitute for development; most famines and disasters are made by man not by nature; war and conflict spill over the spaces that should be occupied by development; the "international community" is "too busy" with military or foreign power alignments; by local corruption or foreign greed, or simply because they don't feature on the geo-strategic map. In the end, development is a profoundly political business. The world has got it right — but it is a message for governments, including here — not just the agencies.

Giving parrots a bad name

Usher's Democratic Unionist party leader attacked the Queen as "foolish" for saying that she shared most people's delight at the Good Friday accord. He then accused her of echoing the "voice of her masters" — indeed, of becoming their "puppet-rot". Of course the Queen does have a constitutional duty to support her government's policies, but there is no reason to doubt that she was genuinely pleased at the progress towards peace in Mr Gingrich has now blamed the state department for "picking a fight" because it presumed to complain about his remark. He and Mr Paisley have in not in common, not least the tactic of asking others to apologise when they themselves are in the wrong. But at least he has refrained from taking the parrot's name in vain. This much-maligned bird is a loyal and inventive pet. It may repeat (though often with creative additions) what others say: Mr Paisley, Mr Gingrich and other mega-brokers of the ultra-right merely repeat themselves, again and again and again.

Russia's fast rewind through all our pasts

Grigory Yablinsky, the Russian politician the West loves most, pulls the problems chillingly together in the latest issue of the American journal, Foreign Relations. You want clear (and related) nightmares? "The increasing risks of chaos are evident in the rumours of nuclear smuggling. Russia has thousands of tonnes of nuclear, chemical and biological weapons. Under the rule

Is there an answer to the Russian conundrum? No more than there is a definition of where the two-headed eagle for Europe and Asia looks first in search of inspiration. NATO draws a line at the border and sits there passively. A country without a compass is a country without easy identity.

But this is where the gloom begins to turn into something rather different. We assume that democracy, like the market economy, can be learned in a crash course of hard-ship. We believe transformation can be instant. We kid ourselves.

It's this sense of rhythm of the process that escapes so many Western observers and so many Russians themselves. Instant communication means instant actions -

Russia hasn't ceased to exist. It is a past and of our future unrolling day by day in a world that has forgotten to remember how to pause and wait.

Since the initial emotion caused by the violent attacks in Kosovo in February and March subsided, the Albanians have hardly been exercised by the plight of the Kosovars. "Patriotic feeling is feeble," said Ratko Kongoli, a writer. "People are concerned mostly with working out their own day-to-day problems. . . . For historical reasons Kosovars and Albanians are not really that close to one another."

Warring facti

Warring factions bring fear to Karachi

The struggle to gain control of the districts where the mohajirs are concentrated (they account for 66 per cent of Karachi's 10-12 million inhabitants) is causing blood to be spilt day after day. The struggle has meist of such proportions cannot function without arms and without raising taxes from the communities that it controls. The wars of the two MQMAs represent a struggle between gangs that for years have been developing their turf, which they tax and protect."

Like the other small traders in his neighbourhood, Massil has also been the victim of the gangs' fund-raisers. His only wish is for law and

sh. "It would be hard to be more corrupt than the police, and in any case, they don't do a thing."

"People are afraid of their police," says Jameel Yusuf, who heads the police-citizens liaison committee. "No government has had the will to reform them."

• The provincial government tends to play down the clashes between the MQM factions, which are threatening the ruling coalition. The migrants — Afghans, Burmese, Bangladeshis and Iranians.

• Pakistan's problems are amplified in Karachi — the law is flouted, communities tend to be marginalised and don't see themselves represented within the state, and the gap is widening between an élite that looks out only for itself and the common people who are struggling to survive.

(May 27)

affairs that is both unhealthy and dangerous. Contesting his country's foreign policy, the Speaker of the Congress discredits himself as a statesman. Should he be tempted to enter the presidential race, it will have to be remembered that he tried — and unfortunately succeeded in — to bring US Middle East policy into line with Israeli extremists.

(May 28)

Le Monde

Albanians divided over plight of brethren

Since the initial emotion caused by the violent attacks in Kosovo in February and March subsided, the Albanians have hardly been exercised by the plight of the Kosovars. "Patriotic feeling is feeble," said Ratko Kongoli, a writer. "People are concerned mostly with working out their own day-to-day problems. . . . For historical reasons Kosovars and Albanians are not really that close to one another."

In the past few months, however, Albanians have been moved by television pictures of Kosovars killed by Serbian police. "There's an underlying sympathy with Kosovo," said Molikom Zeqo, director of the National History Museum and organization of ethnic minorities.

Officially, at least, the government says there can be no question of backing the Kosovos' claims to independence. Privately, though, an aide to the president, Rexhep Mejdani, expressed doubts that Kosovo's ethnic Albanians would be satisfied with autonomous status within Yugoslavia. "The Albanian government has opted for reason . . . and money," explained a Western diplomat. In a country where the per

The united political front is showing signs of cracking. When the first clashes took place in March, President Mejdani and his predecessor, Sali Berisha, walked side by side in Tirana at the head of several thousand people. But Berisha has now got over losing the presidency last July.

"He's a populist who'll exploit the Kosovo issue and the larger one of gathering an Albanian nation scattered in three countries to gather into a single state," warned Ljubonja.

port of Christian fundamentalists, had something in common with the nativist-religious fundamentalism that constitutes the political core of Netanyahu's government.

l.
m u-u-no w-nt

nu
tic
It
le-ell
to.
all
n-

Gingrich had a hard time deciding that he advised Netanyahu affairs that is both unhealthy and dangerous. Contesting his country's foreign policy, the Speaker of the Congress discredits himself as a statesman. Should he be tempted to enter the presidential race, it will have to be remembered that he tried — and unfortunately succeeded in — to bring US Middle East policy into line with Israeli extremists.

(May 28)

... ..

Aiming to raise the spirit level

Whisky's market power is forcing cognac producers to change their tactics, writes Pascal Gailhier

HIGH-quality grape brandy makers in southwestern France are scrambling for a share of the rapidly growing whisky market. Eight months after it was taken over by Bernard Arnault's company LVMH, cognac producer Hennessy is back on the offensive and has come up with five new brandy-based drinks.

"My competitors are not the other cognac producers, but the makers of other spirits," says Christophe Navarre, aged 39, who was recently appointed chairman and managing director of this 200-year-old firm.

Navarre, a Belgian, came from a beer background. He shocked his former colleagues at the interview brewery when he waved a bottle of Coca-Cola at a marketing strategy meeting and announced: "Gentlemen, here's our main rival." He went on to turn Lefebvre into a favourite drink among young Belgians.

Navarre is hoping that the same kind of shock therapy will work in the Cognac department. He is openly and unabashedly taking on cognac's biggest competitors — whisky, gin and vodka. Hennessy is planning to put three new "single-distillery" cognacs on the American market in September in an attempt to counter the success of "single malts," which have been responsible for pushing up sales of Scotch whiskies in the upmarket spirits class.

But the real new product will be a clear young cognac in a small sack container resembling a gin or vodka bottle. It will be called Pure White. The idea is to get young drinkers of strong liquor who like to go to bars and nightclubs to adopt the cognac as a long drink. If the trials are satisfactory, the product will be released in supermarkets at the price of a high quality whisky, about $24.

Navarre is determined to use every possible means to achieve his goal of doubling Hennessy's share of the world market in "premium spirits" to 2 per cent (about 270 million cases), each containing a dozen 70cl bottles.

The offensive by the leading cognac maker could shatter many sobersided contacts with cognac and herald a reconquest of the market.

It's not too soon, either. Since 1990 France's leading exporter (cognac accounts for 70 per cent of France's exports of spirits) has been looking for new consumers. In Japan, the second largest market for cognac after the United States, sales reached 28.5 million bottles in 1990, but fell to 18 million in 1997. In the rest of Asia, which had shown great promise in recent years, sales have suffered severely as a result of the financial crisis that began a year ago. As for the US, the boom in the past two years has been in cognacs at the lower end of the market (three stars or VS), which generate more volume but smaller profits than in Asia.

A new strategy is emerging to shift the emphasis back to Europe, which still accounts for 38.6 per cent of sales in volume (50 per cent in 1985), and to France, a market shopped too long abandoned to the "ghetto" of after-dinner liquors. Stimulated by a campaign mounted jointly by all French cognac producers — on the theme "Older your life, cubes a cognac" — the French market is at last bouncing back after a 10-year slump.

Last year 7.9 million bottles were sold in France, 10 per cent more than in 1996. But this was just 8 per cent of the number of bottles of whisky sold in the same period, whereas sales of both drinks were running practically level back in 1970.

Hennessy cognac has come up with new brandy-based drinks.

Following Hennessy's example, the other big cognac makers are also preparing to do battle. Rémy Martin has come up with a blend of cognac and vodka named Platinum, currently being test-marketed. In Britain and Germany, Martell (owned by Seagram) is putting out a delicate cognac with a nutty flavour called & Co, which comes in a smart black label. It, too, is being tried out in Britain, the third largest market for French cognacs.

By offering their product in mixers, cognac makers hope to end to the spirit's image as an inaccessible or outdated luxury. They are also slashing prices. Thanks to its 50 per cent vodka content, Rémy Martin, for example, is being sold at a cut-rate price of $16 a bottle.

The sight of these venerable cognac producers "blurring" it with Jean-Paul Lafargue's smile. This son of a winemaker from southwestern France had been a lone voice for the past 15 years. In 1983 he marketed a drink named Alizé, which was a blend of cognac and passion fruit juice. Last year Alizé generated a turnover of about $24 million for the joint venture L. & L. set up by Lafargue and his importer in the US, Kobrand.

Traditional cognac makers are acting by looking down on this intruder in their midst. Today, however, the big producers are looking enviously at the $200 cases of Alizé that Lafargue exported to the US last year. To mark last year's Festival of Dedications in Cognac, Lafargue came up with another new product, 30 Beer, an Alizé beer blend flavoured with XO cognac of superior category. The region's cognac producers treated it with disdain, but it said that all of them secretly sampled the drink.

(May 27)

Blasting into the new order

COMMENT
François Géré

LET us thank India's scientists, engineers and technicians, and the leaders of the ruling Bharatiya Janata party, less for the nuclear tests than for the political lesson they have given. Considerations of regional instability apart, the May 11 and 13 tests signalled the end of an amorphous period known as the "post-cold war". It was characterized by a partial settlement of the Soviet-American confrontation and the relative ease with which the break-up of the Soviet Union was absorbed, particularly in terms of nuclear non-proliferation.

The Indian nuclear tests say bluntly what we already knew but did not dare admit — that we have entered a period of fierce global competition to find our places in the new order of things. No place for India as a nuclear option is still open. It is the United Nations Security Council? The old system is entrenched for all time? Well, that's no bed of roses. We must turn ourselves in a different way. An archaic conception of power? Maybe. But the West forgets too quickly that there are quite a few cultural divergences around the world when it comes to concepts of power. The nuclear factor is a blunt assertion of other points of view.

Not one test, but five. This demonstration of technical know-how carries a message: "We're competent all along the line — nuclear fission, thermonuclear fusion right up to low-energy weapons, the relatively reduced risk of which enables incorporating them in surface-to-surface and sea-to-surface missiles."

The Indian tests send political messages to Pakistan, China and the United States. The message to Pakistan is: "You will never play in the Big Power League." This is probably the most worrying part. In this dust of national pride, the Pakistani reaction is likely to touch off a nuclear ballad. The second message is directed at China. Since 1960 Indian nationalists have been obsessed by the need to get on top of the developing nation as "dedicated to peace". In the words of Prime Minister Atal Bihari Vajpayee, even though modern India has the world's fourth-largest military and has often bullied its smaller neighbors.

They say they won't go through the same kind of Cold War, but... they've made strategic mistakes in the past," said Stephen P. Cohen, a South Asia specialist who teaches at the University of Illinois. "They are no worse than us, but no better, and the stakes are very high."

Le Monde
Directeur: Jean-Marie Colombat
Copyright by
© Le Monde, Paris
All rights strictly reserved.

Misplaced Faith in Nuclear Deterrence

COMMENT
Kenneth J. Cooper
and John Ward Anderson

AS THEY engage in a second round of nuclear tests, India and Pakistan have been guided by an optimistic reading of the bygone Cold War's history that assumes mutual possession of nuclear weaponry automatically prevents nuclear war, just as it ultimately did during four decades of confrontation between the United States and former Soviet Union.

While placing faith in the effectiveness of nuclear deterrence, leaders of the two hostile neighbors on the Indian subcontinent also expect to sign the Comprehensive Test Ban Treaty, or make a similar international agreement, as the spiraling costs and escalating tensions resulting from an arms race between India and Pakistan.

India and Pakistan, for the most part bystanders to the Cold War, also have underestimated the impact that nationalist passions and fear of being obliterated once unleashed, can have in a nuclearized world. Rather than risks, the nations mostly see national security in nuclear arms.

These shared perspectives are based partly on an understanding that two of the world's poorest nations cannot easily afford to spend billions of dollars on nuclear weapons and expensive military systems to deliver them.

In the case of India, the attitude is also based on a one-sided view of the international system as "dedicated to peace". In the words of Prime Minister Atal Bihari Vajpayee, even though modern India has the world's fourth-largest military and has often bullied its smaller neighbors.

They say they won't go through the same kind of Cold War, but... they've made strategic mistakes in the past," said Stephen P. Cohen, a South Asia specialist who teaches at the University of Illinois. "They are no worse than us, but no better, and the stakes are very high."

Scott Sagan, a political scientist at Stanford University, said: "They are taking only the positive aspects of the past experience and saying they'll copy that, and they're assuming they'll avoid the negative aspects. There's no reason why the good news of the past will repeat itself."

Sagan warned that avoiding nuclear war cannot be taken for granted. "It's like walking on thin ice. The fact that the United States and Soviets did it once during the Cold War should not give anyone confidence that it can be done again."

India and Pakistan have managed to leave themselves a couple of plausible ways out of a second Cold War. Vajpayee's government has dropped hints that India might be willing to sign the Comprehensive Test Ban Treaty, or make a similar international agreement, as the spiraling costs and escalating tensions resulting from an arms race between India and Pakistan.

India and Pakistan, for the most part bystanders to the Cold War, also have underestimated the impact that nationalist passions and fear of being obliterated once unleashed, can have in a nuclearized world. Rather than risks, the nations mostly see national security in nuclear arms.

These shared perspectives are based partly on an understanding that two of the world's poorest nations cannot easily afford to spend billions of dollars on nuclear weapons and expensive military systems to deliver them.

In the case of India, the attitude is also based on a one-sided view of the international system as "dedicated to peace". In the words of Prime Minister Atal Bihari Vajpayee, even though modern India has the world's fourth-largest military and has often bullied its smaller neighbors.

The Washington Post

the worst of the Cold War, the governments of India and Pakistan have ignored their previous competition to develop nuclear arms and missile systems to deliver them.

"India shall not engage in an arms race. India shall not subscribe to or reinvent the doctrines of the Cold War," Vajpayee's government declared last week in a statement to Parliament.

The answer for us lies in nuclear deterrence," Shamsul Ahmad, Pakistan's top career diplomat, said after the nuclear tests.

In addition, leaders of Western industrialized nations plan to meet soon to develop an initiative to avert a nuclear arms race in South Asia. But the international community has come too late to stop the escalation.

India and Pakistan have engaged in an arms race since 1974, when India conducted its first nuclear test. The latest competition that has lasted more than half a century to openly cross the nuclear threshold began in 1965, when the Indian government, led by the Congress party, prepared for an underground nuclear test with an election approaching but scuttled its plans in the face of U.S. pressure.

"It keeps pouncing," Bharti Karnad, an Indian analyst, said recently on a television talk show.

After India conducted underground nuclear tests in May, government officials said they expected Pakistan to do likewise. But as more than two weeks passed, members of Vajpayee's Hindu nationalist Bharatiya Janata Party began crowing that maybe the Islamic Republic of Pakistan could not muster the necessary technology or would be bought off by a generous aid package from the Clinton administration.

With Pakistan's detonations of nuclear devices, the mood changed in New Delhi. Jubilant disapproval among members of India's educated elite who had cheered its nuclear tests May 11 and May 13 as a bold expression of national pride.

Opposition members of Parliament, previously hesitant to criticize a politically popular move, are now accusing Vajpayee's government of precipitating an ominous arms race that it had promised to avoid.

Before Pakistan conducted its tests, Indian officials had at times appeared to underestimate the risks of unintended nuclear conflict, a scenario that had prompted the United States and the former Soviet Union to install elaborate systems of command and control over their nuclear arsenals.

Jaswant Singh, a member of a task force drafting plans for a unilateral security council that is to develop India's nuclear doctrine, had dismissed a foreign reporter's questions about a specialized command and control structure as "a matter of detail."

Nationalistic passions have contributed to shaping the nuclear arms race between India and Pakistan. Prime Minister Shreevani ordered Pakistan's tests despite knowing that the full force of economic sanctions could drive his country into bankruptcy. A group of Pakistani newspaper editors he consulted beforehand acknowledged the economic collapse of the former Soviet Union as a relevant lesson of the Cold War but nonetheless voted overwhelmingly for the government to proceed with tests.

Reacting to Pakistan's response to India's tests, Bal Thackeray, who leads a Hindu nationalist partner in the 14-party coalition government, urged India to produce a devastatingly powerful type of nuclear weapon — hydrogen bombs.

the question of Iranian assets during the Tehran hostage crisis. The court usually holds oral arguments from October to April and rarely schedules a case even for May or early June. But it already has made an exception this term for Starr — agreeing to expedite a dispute over attorney-client privilege related to cooperation the late White House deputy counsel Vincent W. Foster Jr. had with his lawyer before his suicide. Oral arguments are scheduled for next week on whether the attorney-client privilege dissolves when a client dies.

While the justices are likely to come by the questions presented in Starr's latest petition important, such a fast-track schedule may be difficult for them to meet. With just weeks left in its regular term, the Supreme Court has agreed to do so, dating back to 1947; in addition to U.S. v. Nixon, the other cases involved such issues as keeping the steel and mine strikes, and the White House declined to comment on Starr's petition. "We have just been served with the papers and we have not yet had a chance to fully review them," said spokesman James Kennedy.

Under the unusually compressed schedule requested by Starr, the White House would have to respond this week to the request for certiorari. If the court then agrees to hear the case, Starr asked the justices to set a June 15 deadline for both sides to file briefs simultaneously and then June 22 for each to respond to the other. Arguments would be held June 26.

Leaving a case just an appeals court on such an expedited schedule is almost never done. In his petition, Starr could ask the Supreme Court to take back to 1947; in addition to U.S. v. Nixon, the other cases involved such issues as keeping the steel and mine strikes, and

Attacks by the Lord's Resistance Army in Uganda have been extremely brutal

PHOTO: SALEMANN

Uganda moves to rehabilitate war children

Fredrick Pritscher in Gulu

ON THE outskirts of Gulu, capital of Uganda's Northern province, there is a compound surrounded by a wire fence and carefully locked gates. This is the safe haven of 210 Ugandan children, 30 of them girls, who have been through a particularly hellish experience.

From 1996 on, they were kidnapped by the rebels of Joseph Kony's Lord's Resistance Army (LRA) and mostly forced to commit "irreparable" acts before having to accompany their masters to their rear base in Sudan, which supports Kony. Some 2,000-3,000 of the 10,000 children kidnapped in northern Uganda managed to escape from the LRA. Others were taken prisoner by Ugandan troops in the course of armed clashes.

In the Ugandan government's view, such "fighters" should be considered as children, and the sometimes horrific acts they may have committed are to be put down to the systematic brutality and dehumanizing treatment to which they are subjected by the rebels in order to ensure, they remain obedient.

After questioning the child soldiers, Ugandan troops hand them over to two NGOs: the American World Vision and the locally based Gulu District Child Support Organization (GDCSO).

When the child refugees arrive at the GDCSO centre, they are given three changes of civilian clothing and all they need in the way of food and bedding. Those suffering from malnutrition get a special diet. The sick, the wounded and those with severe psychological disorders are taken to hospital.

The children are then put through a routine, which involves waking up, doing the housework, washing, having breakfast and studying in classes until noon, says Bernard Arch, a voluntary teacher. "Afternoons are devoted to discussions with teachers, drawing, therapeutic activities and, as soon as it gets a bit cooler, to sport." The children enjoy an average of six weeks at the centre so as to be used to a normal social life before being sent back to their families — as long as their safety can be guaranteed.

George Omuna, head of the centre, says that 1,013 children aged between five months and 15 years went through the GDCSO centre in 1997. Most of them were kidnapped in 1995-96, but a number were taken by Kony as early as 1992. They were all under 15 years old.

Not one test, but five. This demonstration of technical know-how carries a message: "We're competent all along the line — nuclear fission, thermonuclear fusion right up to low-energy weapons, the relatively reduced risk of which enables incorporating them in surface-to-surface and sea-to-surface missiles."

The Indian tests send political messages to Pakistan, China and the United States. The mes-

Starr seeks to speed up privilege ruling

Right-Minded Individualist

OBITUARY
Barry M. Goldwater

BARRY M. Goldwater, 89, a five-term Arizona senator and a champion of conservatism whose 1964 presidential candidacy launched a revolution within the Republican Party, died on Friday last week at home in Paradise Valley, a suburb of Phoenix.

Goldwater, who retired from the Senate in 1969 as one of his party's most respected old-time leaders, suffered a resounding defeat when he ran for president. But his efforts helped prepare the way for the election of another conservative Republican, Ronald Reagan, as president in 1969.

Goldwater carried only six states and 39 percent of the popular vote in 1964. After the election, most analysts and commentators concluded that the Republican Party was hopelessly divided and Goldwater and his conservative philosophy were all but politically dead.

In fact, he had wrested control of the GOP from the Eastern liberals for years. By 1980, he was acknowledged as a founder of a conservative movement that had become a vital element in mainstream Republican thinking and a major ingredient in Reagan's political ascendancy. It was a 1964 speech delivered on behalf of Goldwater that brought Reagan to national prominence and helped launch his political career.

During his 1964 presidential campaign, Goldwater was attacked by Democrats and opponents within his own party as a demagogue and a leader of right-wing extremists and racists who was likely to lead the United States into nuclear war, eliminate civil rights progress and destroy such social welfare programs as Social Security.

But that perception melted with time. Goldwater returned to the Senate in 1969 and went on to serve three more terms. Long before his retirement he had come to be regarded as the Grand Old Man of the Republican Party and one of the nation's most respected ex-ponents of conservatism, which he sometimes defined as holding on to that which was tested and true and opposing change simply for the sake of change.

Barry Goldwater... His failure in the 1964 presidential election paved the way for Ronald Reagan's triumph in 1980

In all, he served 30 years in the Senate, but he was out of office for four years after losing his bid for the presidency, and he was in a political limbo for almost 10 years after that defeat. He reemerged during the Watergate crisis of the early 1970s. Then, the blunders and candor that had so often earned Goldwater's presidential campaign a decade earlier, and his outspoken and harsh criticism of Richard M. Nixon's failure to deal with the growing Watergate scandal, were among the vital ingredients of his political renaissance.

The president, he charged, had shown "a tendency to dabble and dabble and argue on very nebulous grounds like executive privilege and confidentiality when all the American people wanted to know was the truth."

A quintessential Westerner and a man of great personal charm, Goldwater was an invincible gadabout who loved such devices as the electronically operated flagpole at his Arizona home that was rigged to raise the flag at the precise moment it was struck by the rays of the morning sun. He was an enthusiastic ham radio operator, airplane pilot and photographer who loved to take pictures of the people and landscapes of the American West.

He championed a brand of rugged individualism, and he never hesitated to speak his mind. He could be both colorful and profane, and he often said things he later wished he hadn't. "Barry, you speak too quick and too loud," former president Dwight D. Eisenhower once told him, and Goldwater acknowledged Eisenhower was right.

There are words of mine floating around in the air that I would like to reach up and eat," he once said. In his personal and political memoirs, "With No Apologies," published in 1979, Goldwater observed that his run for the presidency in 1964 "was like trying to stand up in a hammock." He said he knew that his chances of winning were slim and contended that his fellow Republicans cost him any chance he might have had during the battle for the Republican nomination.

By the time the convention opened, it had been branded as a fascist, a racist, a trigger-happy warmonger, a nuclear madman and the candidate who couldn't win," Goldwater recalled.

That convention, at the Cow Palace in San Francisco, was long remembered for the spectacle of Goldwater partisans drowning out New York Gov. Nelson Rockefeller with a chorus of hoos and hoots when he addressed the delegates. It was also remembered for Goldwater's own acceptance speech, in which he declared that conservatism "is a philosophy of life, not a party label," and that "extremism in the defense of liberty is no vice and...moderation in the pursuit of justice is no virtue."

Goldwater declined to run for a sixth term in the Senate in 1980, and he retired from politics as chairman of the Senate Armed Services Committee and the Senate Intelligence Committee. "If I had a chance to do it again, I'd do it again," he said in the end.

More than anyone else, he was responsible for the unanimous Senate passage of the Defense Department Reorganization Act of 1968, the last major achievement of his political career. That measure, however, provoked the objections of the military establishment, streamlined command channels at the Pentagon. It was "the only goddamn thing I've done in the Senate that's worth a damn," Goldwater said.

Barry M. Goldwater, politician, born January 1, 1903; died May 29, 1989

Barry M. Goldwater, politician, born January 1, 1903; died May 29, 1989

responding to their views came from AFL-CIO President John Sweeney. He praised the speech as "a dramatic turning point in the debate over the rules of globalism."

Commerce Secretary William Daley — a free-trader who served as the administration point man on the North American Free Trade Agreement — also praised the speech. At an interview last week that "one of our friends on the far right and far left" regard the WTO as "some sort of 'Trilateral Commission' of the 1980s," a body that makes important decisions in secret.

"If we're going to depend on international organizations," Daley said, referring to the WTO and International Monetary Fund, "we'd better not only start defending them, but also deal with the legitimate problems that have come up... We're trying to get this debate on a different level."

Forging a new consensus around global growth with equity would be a major achievement. "There is a soundness of logic that greeted the president's speech suggests that the road there will be long, and that there may be bumps on the way," said the Washington Post.

Serbs Step Up Attacks In Kosovo

Christina Spuri in Belgrad, Serbia, Albania

SERBIAN forces have stepped up their attacks on ethnic Albanian villages near Kosovo's mountainous border with Albania, burning and shelling homes and sending refugees fleeing into international observance and refugee crossings the further east last week.

From village points here on the Albanian side of the remote, rugged border, at least three villages in Kosovo's strategic Morina Valley — a suspected transit point for weapons being smuggled from Albania to separatist rebels in Kosovo — were under assault.

Two of the villages — Smolka and Morina — were closely guarded by Serbian forces. The third, Ponocac, came under fire the next day. Explosions could be heard at regular intervals as artillery rained across the valley. The whistle of falling mortar shells and scorching local shrapnel, unprovoked by the attack, looked to the sky.

A delegation of Kosovo Albanians, who met with President Clinton at the White House on Thursday last week, said the attacks on villages near the border were part of an effort by the Serbs to carve out a strategic archipelago from the Kosovo peninsula of the Balkans.

"It is a scorched-earth policy," Veton Surroi, an adviser to Kosovo's ethnic Albanian leader Ibrahim Rugova, told the Washington Post. "Our warning to the president was that this is the first step toward the end of the Kosovo people."

In Kosovo since late February, when Serbian army and special police forces launched a campaign to crush ethnic Albanian guerrillas, Albanians outnumber Serbs by 9-to-1 in Kosovo.

Here in Belgrad, the closest Albanian town to the fighting, military officials from Albania and Western Europe have been arriving daily to assess the conflict.

Commerce Secretary William Daley — a free-trader who served as the administration point man on the North American Free Trade Agreement — also praised the speech. At an interview last week that "one of our friends on the far right and far left" regard the WTO as "some sort of 'Trilateral Commission' of the 1980s," a body that makes important decisions in secret.

"If we're going to depend on international organizations," Daley said, referring to the WTO and International Monetary Fund, "we'd better not only start defending them, but also deal with the legitimate problems that have come up... We're trying to get this debate on a different level."

Forging a new consensus around global growth with equity would be a major achievement. "There is a soundness of logic that greeted the president's speech suggests that the road there will be long, and that there may be bumps on the way," said the Washington Post.

Another sign that opponents of Clinton's past trade policies see him

WASHINGTON WEEKLY
June 7, 1989

As Wall Street pats itself on the back, trouble lurks behind the boom, warn Joel Kotkin and David Friedman

Keep the Champagne on Ice

WITH the Asian dragons soaring to new heights and U.S. unemployment rates at modern lows, American elites are indulging in an orgy of self-congratulation unmatched since the Roaring Twenties.

"France had the 17th century. Britain the 19th, and America the 20th. It will also have the 21st," gushed real estate magnate and publisher Mortimer Zuckerman in Appl's Foreign Affairs. In the big techno-wired, Peter Schwartz and Peter Leyden recently reassessed. "We are riding the early waves of a 25-year run of a greatly expanding economy that will do much to solve the seemingly intractable problems like poverty and crime festering throughout the world." Conservative thinker Irving Kristol, writing in the Wall Street Journal, celebrated the emerging "American Imperium."

We have another idea: Hold the champagne. Millennia of gluttony may well prove tragically short-lived. To a large extent, it reflects a widely shared prosperity by a people narcissism that has snarled both mainstream liberals and conservatives — a kind of cross-ideological delirium fueled by rising stock prices and a robust demand for well-educated white-collar baby boomers. This Yuppie Consensus about the future of the U.S. economy has pushed aside discussion of America's more troubling realities. Increasingly, serious critics now zone arching from the fringes of the left and right.

Increasingly, serious critics now zone arching from the fringes of the left and right. Increasingly, serious critics now zone arching from the fringes of the left and right.

Increasingly, serious critics now zone arching from the fringes of the left and right. Increasingly, serious critics now zone arching from the fringes of the left and right.

Increasingly, serious critics now zone arching from the fringes of the left and right. Increasingly, serious critics now zone arching from the fringes of the left and right.

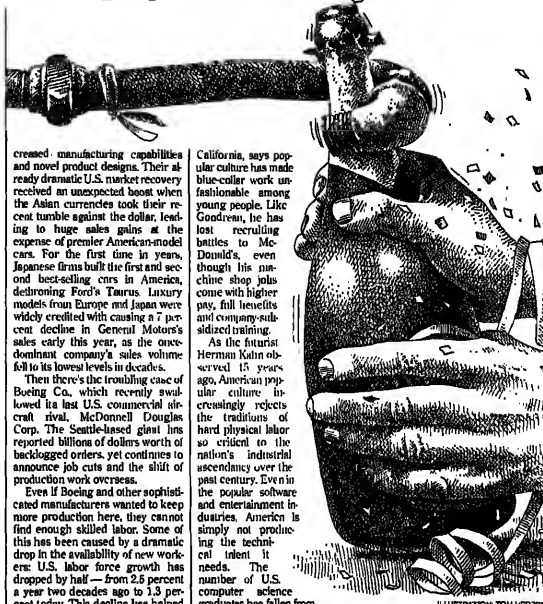

Increasingly, serious critics now zone arching from the fringes of the left and right. Increasingly, serious critics now zone arching from the fringes of the left and right.

Increasingly, serious critics now zone arching from the fringes of the left and right. Increasingly, serious critics now zone arching from the fringes of the left and right.

Increasingly, serious critics now zone arching from the fringes of the left and right. Increasingly, serious critics now zone arching from the fringes of the left and right.

Increasingly, serious critics now zone arching from the fringes of the left and right. Increasingly, serious critics now zone arching from the fringes of the left and right.

Increasingly, serious critics now zone arching from the fringes of the left and right. Increasingly, serious critics now zone arching from the fringes of the left and right.

California, says popular culture has made blue-collar work as fashionable among young people. Like Goldwater, he has lost recruiting battles to McDonald's, even though his machine shop industry come with higher pay, full benefits and company-subsidized training.

Herman Kahn observed 15 years ago, American popular culture has been losing touch with the nation's industrial ascendancy over the past century. Even in the popular software and entertainment industries, America is simply not producing the technical talent it needs.

The drop by half — from 2.5 percent a year two decades ago to 1.3 percent today. This decline has helped push unemployment to record-low levels, but it has put extreme pressure on employers who need a steady supply of trained workers.

Increasingly, it is the dearth of the labor force that presents the most pressing challenge to American industry. The country is not training enough skilled workers to support its manufacturing industries. At New Mexico Machine Works in Burbank, California, the nation's good economic times have allowed company graduates have fallen from a high of 50,000 in 1986 to 36,000 in 1984. The National Science Foundation reported that, in 1985, 30 percent of all R&D research and development workers with science and engineering doctorates were foreign-born. One-fifth of all undergraduates in computer-related fields — and half of all doctoral candidates — are citizens of foreign countries.

Street values real U.S. economic might, or is exploiting the short-term attractiveness of American equities in light of favorable interest rates and fiscal instability in Euro-obsessed Europe and brown-belt Asia. It is far from clear that America's recent upturn heralds the end of cyclical economics or the dawn of limitless prosperity. Perhaps the current economic boom is like a good run at the craps table, with the winners — skittish global capital — ready to turn tail with the first bad roll.

Another problem with the Yuppie Consensus lies in the limits of this "limitless" prosperity. The remnants of the non-Clintonized left are correct in suggesting that a significant proportion of the U.S. population faces permanent impoverishment or, at best, stagnant wages. The percentage of people living in poverty grew from 12.9 percent in the early '80s to 13.8 percent in 1986, government figures show.

By most measurements, the Clinton boom has been a long-term egalitarian that the much-maligned Reagan "cut of greed." Between 1980 and 1985, the median family income actually declined slightly while the number of people on welfare rose from 18 million to 20 million.

Since 1979, the wages of the bottom 20 percent of workers earned nearly 12 percent, and a 1.6 percent since 1980 alone. Even the pro-Clinton Progressive Policy Institute recently admitted that, adjusted for inflation, competition for the bottom half of the wage scale is 75 cents less per hour than 20 years ago. In Silicon Valley, according to a study by the labor-based Economic Policy Institute, real wages for the bottom 20 percent of the workforce have declined during the decade as the ratio of top corporate to production worker salaries skyrocketed from 41 to 1 (1991) to 220 to 1 (1986).

This tendency to ignore America's urban problems while celebrating the nation's global dominance is particularly acute in New York City — the epicenter of U.S. triumphalism — where unemployment rates are nearly twice the national average and job growth lags behind almost every major city in the nation. The region has the worst income inequality in the nation.

This growing gap between the affluent and the working poor threatens America's future prosperity. The percentage of Americans who feel the interests of employers and employees are in conflict has increased from 25 percent during the Great Depression — the supposed heyday of class conciliarism — to 46 percent today, according to polling data.

The "indifference of the Yuppies" consensus to such potentially devastating realities triggers class problems with the "let-them-eat-cake" self-absorption of the 1920s. None of these presupposes that America's future is necessarily bleak — only that declining victory on the strength of a bull market, even an unprecedented one, is premature at best.

If we can use current prosperity to address our competitive class problems, rather than luxuriate in the glow of a Dow Jones average that may soon approach the 10,000 mark, it is certainly possible to imagine a second American century in which national challenges are honestly addressed and even successfully resolved. But it is profoundly self-serving to close the future by ignoring the present.

Joel Kotkin is a senior fellow with the Pepperdine University Institute for Public Policy. David Friedman is a fellow at the MIT Japan Program.

Sidetracked on Road to Global Growth

COMMENT
E.J. Dionne Jr.

SOME of what happens in politics is hidden in plain sight. Last week President Clinton announced a major shift in America's approach to global economics. His ideas would affect how workers and the environment gain protection and whether trade agreements are to be open or in secret. Almost nobody paid attention.

Clinton's announcement came in a speech before the World Trade Organization in Geneva. There is a time when the address would have been front-page news. It was, for one thing, a direct response to critics of the WTO who accuse it of bowing to the wishes of powerful international companies and making its decisions without any public accountability.

Clinton said that on the matter of secrecy, at least, he will be right. We must modernize the WTO by opening its doors to the scrutiny and participation of the public," he declared. "Today, when one nation challenges the practices of another, the proceeding takes place behind closed doors. I propose that all hearings by the WTO be open to the public." Clinton promised the United States would open any proceedings it is part of and challenge other countries to do the same.

For good measure he proposed that private citizens be able to present their views before the WTO — meaning that business or labor people, Ralph Nader or Pat Buchanan, environmentalists or anyone else could raise a ruckus when they thought vital issues were at stake. Since international organizations now play such a big role in every nation's economy, how can they deny the basic right to petition and air grievances?

In fact, Clinton's new proposals are a direct response to the defeat of fast track. They grow out of ongoing discussions between Treasury Secretary Robert Rubin and a group of House Democrats.

Some of Rubin's interlocutors — Rep. David Bonior of Michigan, for example — were sharply critical of Clinton's old approach to trade. But many of them, including Rep. Nancy Pelosi of California and Barney Frank of Massachusetts, are directly borrowed rhetoric from critics of his past trade policies. "We must do more to ensure that spirited economic competition among nations never becomes a race to the bottom — in environmental protection, consumer protections or labor standards. We should be leveling up, not leveling down."

Clinton's speech got so little coverage may reflect the muffling of his voice by scandal news. But it demonstrates for certain the eclipse of trade as a major public issue after last year's defeat of authority for the president to negotiate trade deals on a "fast track."

In fact, Clinton's new proposals are a direct response to the defeat of fast track. They grow out of ongoing discussions between Treasury Secretary Robert Rubin and a group of House Democrats.

Some of Rubin's interlocutors — Rep. David Bonior of Michigan, for example — were sharply critical of Clinton's old approach to trade. But many of them, including Rep. Nancy Pelosi of California and Barney Frank of Massachusetts, are directly borrowed rhetoric from critics of his past trade policies. "We must do more to ensure that spirited economic competition among nations never becomes a race to the bottom — in environmental protection, consumer protections or labor standards. We should be leveling up, not leveling down."

Joel Kotkin is a senior fellow with the Pepperdine University Institute for Public Policy. David Friedman is a fellow at the MIT Japan Program.

Osbert was born in 1892, the son of parents who were eccentric even by the most exacting standards of Victorian waywardness. His father was by turns fervent, arrogant, ridiculous and utterly self-absorbed. His mother was a foolish and irresponsible spendthrift, and in 1915 she was sent to jail for debt. This was hardly a stable or secure family background. He himself endured another term of incarceration at public school, and was later to claim that he had been "educated in the holidays."

Phone: (+44) 181 324 5503
Fax: (+44) 181 324 5578
Email: blid@mail.bogo.co.uk

Payment by credit card or UK/Eurocheque payable to:
Guardian Weekly Books
250 Western Avenue, London W3 6EE, UK

Europe airmail
Please add 20% of order value

Rest of the world airmail
Add 30% of order value (approx. 14-21 days) or 40% of order value (7-10 days)

It comes as a surprise to find him tackling what he calls in Learn Children "the modish subject of child abuse". But of course his treatment of it is not a modish. The novels all the more effective for that. A prologue takes place in an

Shaw's record of luck, which was to have his life written by Philip Ziegler, one of the most experienced and versatile biographers of his generation, who has produced another prelatially polished and professional product. There are some splendid stories and excellent jokes. The lighter and darker sides of Osbert's character are fully and fairly presented. The result is a vivid, wholly satisfying biography, which restores Osbert to his rightful place as the most significant Sitwell sibling. It is a first-rate life — of a second-rate man.

WRITTEN during the first world war and the 1920s these tales of Scottish lowland life have the Gothic intensity of a century earlier. Its insights into the motivations of men and women have the wit of Jane Austen with none of the optimism. With Fleming's novel set during the Jacobite Rising of 1745, which betrays the debt he owes to Walter Scott, this collection should resurrect Jacobs's dark yet humorous voice.

GNATUUS SANCHE was the only recorded black voter in England in the 18th century, a critic of the British in India and of African ethnicity in the slave trade and an 18th-century man of letters. He was a slave, a butler, an actor and a grocer. He corresponded with Sterne; was a friend of Garrick and had his portrait painted by Gainsborough, and his letters provide an unusual insight into late 18th-century life. A fascinating man.

Stanley has inherited the schizophrenia which has already claimed a sister, who added a sexual dimension to her brother's condition by exposing herself to him in his infancy. Celibate in the wedding bed, Stanley is sexually incontinent with any other female. After an attempted rape, he is condemned by

Tortilla Curtain, which deals with racism and immigration — Boyle wants his thundering narrative to carry ideological freight. The novel seems to suggest that the central character's sexual sickness is merely an extreme and diagnosed version of standard male attitudes towards women. When one of Mc

If you would like to order this book at the special price of £15 contact CultureShop (see page 28)

logian Pelagius, opponent of the idea of original Sin, and include Elizabeth I, Dr Johnson, the judicious Hooker and the sceptic Hobbes.

It opens with a wonderful chapter on the English language, from the rhythms of the Anglo-Saxon — "That passed, So may this" — to the precision of D J Enright: "I try to write lucidly . . . Vansittar's values are implicit in, and inseparable from, good English. We have grown, or been shocked, out of feeling that "English" values of "decentcy", understatement, common sense and irony are either universal, or universally desirable. That doesn't mean they aren't values."

If you would like to order this book at the special price of £18 contact CultureShop (see page 28)

Please send me free details of how you can help me to become a successful freelance writer

Name

(BLOCK CAPITALS PLEASE)

The Writers Bureau Dept. WE68
7 Dale Street, Manchester, M1 1JB, England
Fax: +44 161 228 3533
Accredited by The O.D.L.O.C.

In The Soprano
Callers is mere while her young head for Edinb
Fagan and Cor
Lady of Perpet school, to sing lition. As their coach heads sc

ated Landa
er's crackling, sur-
set on an island,
ptic version of eth.

anos, Morvern
y mentioned,
ger counterparts
burgh with Slaters adron, nuns at Our ual Succour high
In a choir comperickety school of the Robt. dis-

In the hours ticking up to the ring-off, the six girls swarm over the city, shoplifting, body-piercing, boozing, trunting and tantalizing the bar-loafing male population.

They speak in great riffs of seasoned jest and innuendo — "Scotaperanto" — part of the pure lingo that glitter that makes this book joyous, touting as it does new stuff on the night to

to the future. It also reveals their sense of dread that the way is blocked and bleak, with only Ardiul at the port, a deus ex machina, offering him as their last gasp means of touching freedom. Ardiul might also have rescued the book from the linearity, but Warner affords him no gravitational pull. Perhaps he is saving him, to be Morvern Callard's confessor.

It's ideal for beginners. You can study and write wherever you live. No previous experience or special education required. You can earn while you learn. Details free - including EXPERT OPINIONS. Send now. No obligation.

Please send me free details of how you can help me to become a successful freelance writer

Name

Phone

Business Card Details

Address

☐ Yes ☐ No

The Writers Bureau Dept. WE68,
7 Dale Street, Manchester, M1 1JB, England
Fax: +44 161 228 3593
Accredited by The U.K.A.W.C.

